Notes.

(a) Rahup obtained Chittôr in 1201, changed title of tribe from Gehlot to Sisodiya, and that of its prince from Rawal to Rana.

(b) In this reign Akbar attacked Chittôr and took it: Udai Singh fled and subsequently founded Udaipur.

(c) These two princes waged incessant war with Akbar.

(d) Raj Singh built the beautiful marble embankment which forms the lake of Kankrauli. It cost Rs. 96,00,000, and its object was to give employment to the people of Mewar during the famine of 1661. It is about 12 miles in circumference.

(e) Jai Singh constructed the Jai Sammand or Deybar Lake, the largest lake in India, about 30 miles in circumference.

(f) Bhim Singh had a beautiful daughter, for whose hand the princes of Jaipur and Jôdhpur engaged in a disastrous war; the Rana, not willing to incur the resentment of the unsuccessful suitor, caused his daughter to be poisoned. A curse was then uttered on the line of Bappu Rawal, and of the ninety children born to Bhim, only one survived him, and he died childless. A like fate attended his three successors.

9. Khandi Rao, son of an obscure zamindar distantly related to the reigning Holkar family.
- 10 Maharaja Tukaji Rao, son of Bhao Holkar.

DHAR AND DEWAS.

* In a genealogical table of the family of Holkar prepared by Sir C. M. Wade, Resident at Indôr, 1843, and ordered by the House of Commons to be printed in 1850, we find it stated that the family of Malhiba, from which that of Holkar has descended, was once settled at Gokal, near Mathura, from whence they emigrated to Chittôr, and afterwards to Unaupatkar, near Aurangabad. Ultimately they settled in the village of Halmoram, where Malhiba obtained the situation of "Duty Patel." After him the village came to be called Malhiba Holkar.

GWALIOR.

Ranoji. One account says that the Sindias, who were Patels of Kamarkhera, in the Wai district of the Dekhan, were originally Sudras of the Kumbi class, and that Ranoji was slipper-bearer to the Peshwa. Another account states they were of the Silladar or knightly order, and nearly connected with the Raja Sahu. Anyhow Ranoji was a soldier of fortune of the greatest enterprise and valour. He first attracted attention in 1752.

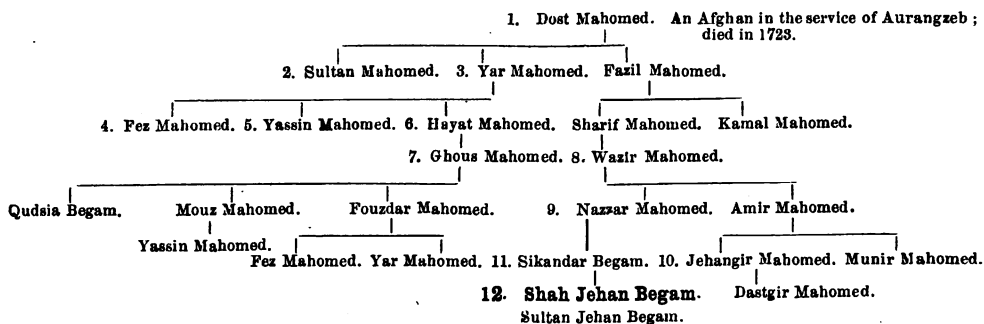

Madhoji, a great commander and statesman; organized an army on European principles, officered by French and Italian adventurers.

Daulat Rao, fought at Aligarh, Delhi, Assaye, Agra, Laswari, and Argaum with the British.

FARIDKÔT.

The Burar-Jat family of Faridkôt has sprung from the same stock as the Phulkian and Kaithal Chiefs, claiming to descend from Burar, the 17th in descent from Jai Sal, the founder of Jaisalmir, and the reputed ancestor of the Sidhu, Burar, and many other Jât clans. The Burar-Jats were thus originally Bhatti Rajputs, and emigrated from Rajputana simultaneously with the Phulkian branch of the tribe.

BARODA.

* Damaji was a gallant soldier in the service of Shahu, Raja of Sattara, and so distinguished himself in 1720-21 that he received the title of Shamsher Bahadur, and became second in command of the army.

† Pilaji Gaekwar, the real founder of the family, succeeded his uncle as Moatalik or Lieutenant, receiving the additional title of Sena Khas Khel.

‡ Damaji, ousting the Dhabari family, obtained possession of Baroda in 1732. In 1755 the Moghal Government in Ahmedabad was quite subverted, and Damaji Gaekwar shared town and country with the Peishwa.

§ Govind Rao obtained in 1800 a lease of the Peishwa's share of Guzerat.

¶ Khande Rao rendered good service to the British Government during the Mutiny.

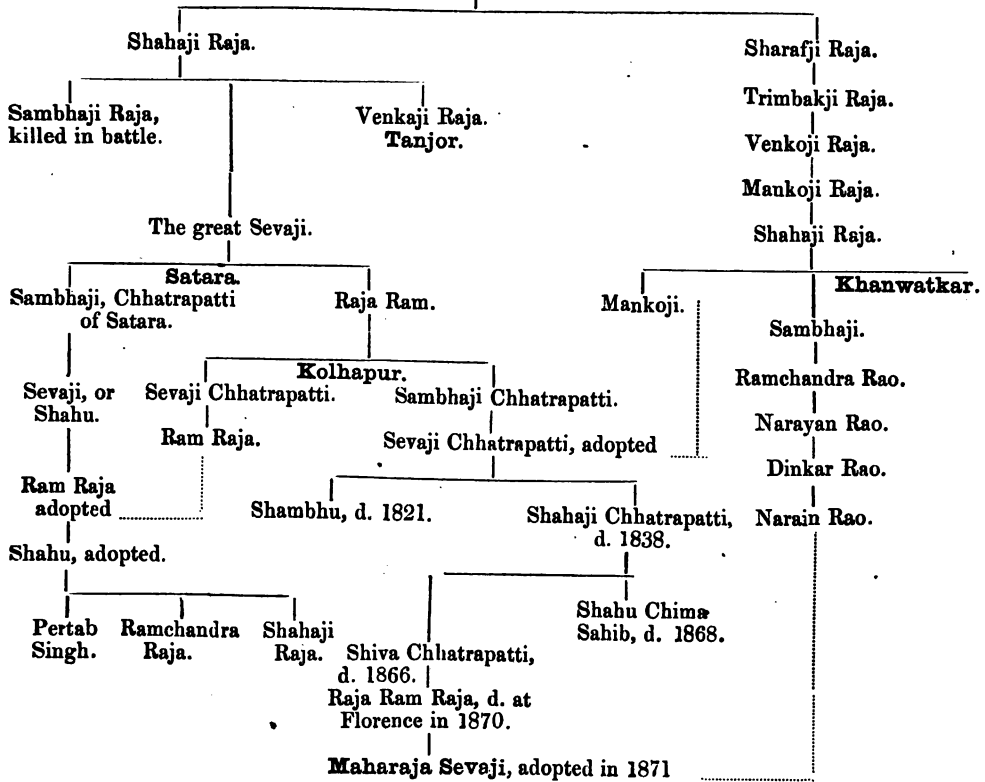

MAISUR.

This genealogical table was obtained from a memorandum drawn up under the immediate supervision of the late Maharaja. Where not otherwise noted, the son succeeded the father.

PART II.

Chapter I.—THE PANJAB.

CHIEFS OF THE PANJAB.

JAMMU AND CASHMIR.—Maharaja Gulab Singh, the founder Cashmir. of this family, began life as a trooper in the army of Ranjit Singh. Rising to a position of high trust, he became the friend of his master, and was entrusted with the government of the principality of Jammu. He subsequently extended his authority over Ladakh and Cashmir; but, on the overthrow of the Sikh Power, Jammu, Cashmir and Ladakh became British territory. The Governor-General, however, deeming it inexpedient to increase the responsibilities of Government by the annexation of so remote and extensive a region, was pleased to confer it upon Gulab Sing, under the terms of a solemn Treaty. Gulab Sing paid a Relief of one million pounds sterling, and bound himself to acknowledge the supremacy of the British Government, and to refer all disputes with other States to its arbitration. In 1857, he sent a contingent of troops to co-operate with the British forces before Delhi. He died soon afterwards, and was succeeded by the present Chief, on whom the right of adoption was conferred by a sannad, dated 15th March 1862.

Maharaja Ranbir Singh contributed Rs. 93,478 to the Panjab University College; and gave a handsome subscription to the Famine Relief Fund of Bengal. He rendered valuable assistance to the various Yarkand missions.

Cashmir consists of great mountain ranges interspersed with fertile valleys. The principal articles of trade are timber, saffron, borax, otter skins, shawls (of which the Maharaja retains the monopoly), papier-mâché, paper, and silver vessels.

A military force of 27,000 men is maintained.

PATTIALA.—The Chiefs of this House and those of Jhind and Pattiala. Nabha, being descended from one Chaudri Phul, are known as the Phulkian Chiefs. Pattiala dates as a sovereign State from the year 1752. During the Nipal war and the Mutiny, the Rulers of this State rendered most important services to the British Government. The late Maharaja was a Knight Grand Commander of the Star of India.

Bahawalpur. BAHAWALPUR.*—The ancestor of the ruling family of this State came from Sind about the middle of the 18th century.

The Chiefs of Bahawalpur rendered assistance to the British Government during the Afghan war; and in 1847-48, during the rebellion of Multan, the army of Bahawal Khan III. co-operated with Sir Herbert Edwardes. In 1863 and 1865, the subordinate Chiefs rebelled against the Nawab; but were defeated in the field.

The mother of the present chief was a Daudputra woman of good lineage, but the wife of a poor wood-cutter. The late Chief admiring her, removed her husband and married her.

Bahawalpur depends for its cultivation mainly upon inundation canals; and the present Political Agent, who during the minority of the Chief presides over the administration, has effected immense improvements in the system of irrigation, and has thus nearly doubled the revenues of the State.

The young Nawab is a fine athletic boy; a capital polo-player.

Jhind. JHIND.—Gajpat Singh founded this principality in 1763, and was recognised as Chief by the Emperor of Delhi in 1768. His successors have ever been conspicuous for the steadiness and heartiness with which they have supported the British Government. Among the foremost and most sincere of those who proffered allegiance after the overthrow of the Mahrattas was Bagh Singh, of Jhind; and, in 1857, Sarup Singh, Raja of Jhind, was the first to march against the mutineers at Delhi. His troops acted as the vanguard of the army, and remained in the British camp before Delhi until the re-occupation of the city. A portion of them took part in the assault. He received, in return, extensive grants of territory.

Nabha. NABHA.—Hamir Singh founded the town of Nabha in 1755; and greatly extended the principality. During the first Sikh war the ruling Chief neglected to attend to the requisitions of the Governor-General's Agent, and was accordingly deposed.

* Vide "Ocean Highways," March, 1874.

In 1857, the young Chief, Bharpur Singh, rendered good service to the British Government, and was rewarded by a large grant of lands.

KAPURTHALA.—The family of the Ahluwalias claim descent from Rana Kapur, a Rajput immigrant from Jaisalmir. The family first acquired political importance during the disorders consequent upon the invasions of Nadir Shah and Ahmed Shah Durani. In the first Sikh war the Kapurthala troops fought against the British at Aliwal, and the Cis-Satlaj estates of the Chief were accordingly confiscated. In 1849, Sirdar Nehal Singh, of Kapurthala, was created a Raja. He stood to his allegiance in the Mutiny, and was rewarded with grants of land. His son, and successor, died when on his way to England, at Aden.

MANDI.—The town of Mandi was founded in 1527 by Bahu Sen, the first Raja. In February 1846, Raja Balbir Sen formally tendered his allegiance to the British Government. Of the 360 forts, which tradition assigns to this principality, only ten are now in preservation. Of these the most famous is the fort of Kamalgarh. There are salt mines at Guma and Dirang.

MALER-KOTLA.—This State came under British protection in 1809. The near relatives of the Chief enjoy a share in the family estate, and exercise sovereign powers therein, subject to a general subordination to the Nawab.

FARIDKOT.—The autonomy of this State dates from 1763. On the outbreak of the war with Lahor in 1845, the Raja Pahar Singh rendered service to the British Government, and received in recognition of his loyalty a grant of half the territory confiscated from the Raja of Nabha. During the second Sikh war and the Mutiny, Raja Wazir Singh co-operated with the British troops, and was duly rewarded.

CHAMBA.—In 1846 this mountain State passed into the hands of the British, and a part of it was transferred to Gulab Singh, of Jammu; but, in 1847, an agreement with the Jammu Chief restored the alienated portion to the British Government, when the whole was graciously conferred upon Raja Sri Singh and his heirs. The forests of Pangí on the Chenab, and of Barmor on the Ravi, are noted for their fine timber.

SUKET.—Until the year 1200, Mandi and Suket were twin States, united in many interests, yet partially independent of each other. The valley of Bal, 10 miles in length, stretching from within five miles of Mandi to the town of Suket, was the debateable country, and many a battle fought there is still sung in the stirring ballads of Mandi. By the treaty of Lahor, Suket became British territory. But, in 1846, full-sovereignty was conceded to the old reigning family in perpetuity. The Chief, among other engagements, is bound to suppress slavery and the practice of burning and drowning lepers.

Sirmur.

SIRMUR.—The present dynasty dates from the year 1095, when Ugar Sen, Rawal of Jaisalmer, being in the neighbourhood, on a pilgrimage to the Ganges, and having heard that the Chief of this principality was drowned in a flood, is said to have seized the State for himself and his heirs. In 1803, the country was conquered by the Gurkhas. When these intruders were expelled in 1815, Karram Prakash was the Chief; but, owing to his notorious imbecility and profligacy, he was removed in favour of his eldest son, Fatteh Prakash. By a formal Treaty, dated September 1815, the Government conferred the greater portion of the ancient possessions of the family on this Chief and his heirs in perpetuity.

P e t t y States of the Pan- jab.

PETTY STATES OF THE PANJAB.—The States noted in the margin range in extent from upwards of 3,000 to 5 square miles. The Sirdar of Kalsia is one of the Cis-Satlaj chiefs. He possesses sovereign powers in his State; but capital sentences require the confirmation of the British Government. The States of Pataudi, Loharu and Dujana are situated in the Delhi territory. The three Nawabs are of Afghan descent, and received their States from the British Government, in 1806, in recognition of services rendered. The remaining States lie in the mountains between the rivers Satlej and Jamna. Their aggregate area is about 5,441 square miles, with a population of 386,800.

The Hill Chiefs of the Panjab are of pure Rajput descent, having acquired a footing in the mountains, by conquest, between A.D. 816 and 1310.

In 1803, the country was brought under subjection by the Gurkhas, who in turn were conquered in 1815 by the British, under Sir David Ochterlony.

Sentences of death passed by these Chiefs require the confirmation of the Superintendent of the Hill States and the Commissioner of the Division. Other cases are finally disposed of by the Chiefs themselves.

Chapter II.—THE NORTH-WESTERN PROVINCES.

RAMPUR.—In the latter part of the seventeenth century, Rampur. two Afghan brothers, Shah Alam and Hussein Khan, came to India to seek service under the Moghal Emperor. Shah Alam, the elder, left two sons, Daud Khan and Rahmat Khan. Daud Khan distinguished himself in the Mahratta wars, and received a grant of land near Budaon. His adopted son, Ali Mahomed, for his services against the powerful family of Bárá Syeds, obtained from the Emperor of Delhi the title of Nawab. Amid the confusion preceding the dissolution of the Moghal Empire, his life was passed in conflicts with the Raja of Kamaon, the Nawab Wazir of Oudh, and occasionally with the imperial forces, till after a signal reverse he was compelled to surrender all his possessions and seek refuge at the Court. But when the whole force of the Emperor and the Nawab Wazir was occupied in repelling the invasion of the Afghan Chief, Ahmed Shah Durani, Ali Mahomed seized the opportunity to re-occupy his old territory, which ultimately he so extended that at his death he left his heirs the territory formerly called Katehar, and now Rohilkhand. The latter name is believed to be derived from the original seat of the family in Afghanistan.

But his sons were hostages at Delhi ; so the guardianship of the State was assumed by their uncle, Rahmat Khan, known as Hafiz (guardian) Rahmat Khan, together with a cousin of their father. Before long the heirs were released, and a division of territory was made between them and the guardians, the younger son, Faizulla, receiving the jaghir of Kotera, worth about Rs. 6,00,000 a year. But Hafiz Rahmat Khan was still looked upon as head of the family ; and as such led the Rohilla army at the battle of Katra, where he was slain in defending Rohilkhand against the English,* discredibly allied with the Nawab Wazir of Oude in pressing an unjust claim for indemnity charged on account of the Rohilla Chief's failure to help in paying off the Mahrattas, at a time when he was deserted by his Sirdars.

On the death of Faizulla, nearly 20 years later, the elder of his two sons was assassinated by the younger, and the Nawab Wazir called in the aid of the English on behalf of Ahmed Ali, the infant son of the rightful heir. The usurper, with an irregular force of 25,800 men, made a stand near Bareilly, and was completely defeated; but not before a Highland regiment had been almost cut to pieces by the Rohilla Horse. The town of Fattehganj denotes by its name the scene of the victory; a monument on the field commemorates the British loss; and the puppet shows of Bareilly still exhibit the slaughter of the flying red-coats by the usurper's cavalry.

To the infant Nawab was assigned Rampur with lands worth Rs. 10,00,000 a year, and the Nawab of Oude received the rest of Rohilkhand, which, in 1801, he ceded to the English, together with all claims upon the jaghir of Rampur. Rampur was continued to Ahmed Khan and his heirs by the British Government.

Mahomed Yusaf Ali Khan rendered good service in 1857, and was rewarded with an increase to his salute, an additional title, and villages yielding a revenue of more than a lakh of rupees.

Benares. BENARES.—The traditions of the family go back to about the year 1,000, when a Brahman ascetic of Utaria, a village near Benares, foretold the succession of his posterity to the dominions then governed by a Hindu Raja. Munsu Ram (who died in 1739), occupying the ancient family seat in Utaria, rose to high favour with the Governor of Benares, under the Nawab Wazir of Oude; and his son, on presenting a nazzarana of Rs. 21,770, to the Emperor at Delhi, was confirmed in the government of the Jaunpur, Benares and Chunar districts, the possession of four pergunnahs in his own right, and the title of Raja Bahadur. He fortified Utaria, changing the name to Gangapur, reduced several hills forts in the (present) district of Mirzapur, and in the course of twenty-three years extended his semi-independent power over an extensive tract, including nearly all the present district of Ghazipur. In 1763, when the Emperor and the Nawab Wazir marched eastward to expel the English from Bengal, Raja Balwant Singh joined them with 2,000 horse and 5,000 foot; but during the campaign these forces were chiefly distinguished by their predatory disposition; and during the battle of Baxar had the discretion to remain on the wrong side of the Ganges. By the treaty concluded with the Nawab of Oude in 1775, the sovereignty of the districts dependent upon Raja Cheit Singh were transferred to the British; but the British Government continued them to the Raja on condition that a fixed rent should be paid, and that the sovereign privilege of coining money should not be exercised. Subsequently, on Cheit Singh manifesting reluctance to meet the demands of the British Government in respect of a contribution for a contingent force, and being suspected of secret disaffection, he was placed under arrest in his own house by order of Warren Hastings; but being rescued by his troops, he fled, and his nephew, Raja Mahip Narain, was installed in his place, on condition of paying a rent of Rs. 40,00,000 for his land, and leaving the criminal administration of the province and the criminal and civil administration of the city of Benares to the British authorities.

The present Maharaja, Isri Prasada, is a nephew of Raja Udit Narain, who succeeded his father, Raja Mahip Narain.

TEHRI-GARHWAL.—No authentic account of the early Chiefs Tehri of this ancient House exists; but they appear to have exercised absolute sway over the whole of Garhwal, on both sides of the Alaknanda, for many generations, paying a nominal tribute to the Emperors of Delhi. Up to 1254 their residence was at Chandpur, when it was transferred to Srinagar.

In 1804, Raja Pradyamu was expelled by the conquering Gurkhas. What ultimately became of this Chief is not known; but his son, Sudar Shan Sah, fled to the plains, and placed himself in the hands of the British authorities, who, on conquering the Gurkhas, granted Sudar Shan western Garhwal, under the terms of a formal sannad. This Chief, who rendered service in 1857, died without heirs in 1859, and the State lapsed to the Government of India ; but in recognition of Sudar Shan's steady friendship to the British, the State was conferred de novo on his illegitimate son, Bhawani Singh. Tehri is now the capital of the Garhwal Chiefs.

A considerable portion of this little mountain State is covered with valuable deodar forests.

Sikkim.

SIKKIM.—Little is known of the earlier Rajas of Sikkim. Pencho Namguay is supposed to have owed his position to three Dukfa Lamas, who some three hundred years ago converted the Lepchas, and made him Chief of the country. About a hundred years ago, Jida, a Deb Raja of Bhutan, aided by Augmu-la, sister of the Sikkim Raja, Charda Namguay, invaded Sikkim, and held it for six or seven years. The Sikkim Raja, a mere boy, fled to the Court of Lassa, where the king had him educated, and sent him back with a small force to his own country. Between 1780 and 1815, Sikkim was constantly at war with the Gurkhas. In the latter year, at the close of our war with Nipal, the country lying between the Mechi and Tista was handed over by the Government of India to Sikkim under the terms of a formal treaty.

In 1841, Darjiling was ceded to the British Government for an annual payment of Rs. 6,000. Attracted by the freedom and protection enjoyed, Sikkim subjects emigrated in considerable numbers to the British settlement, much to the displeasure of their own authorities ; and, on two occasions, when flagrant acts of kidnapping were committed at the instigation of the Sikkim Durbar, to recover emigrants, it was found necessary to punish the State with an armed force. The punishments inflicted completely effected their object, and a satisfactory understanding now exists between the Raja of Sikkim and the Imperial Government.

Sikhim lies under the shadow of the loftiest peaks in the world. Its steep mountains and profound ravines are clothed with dense forest, only offering the cultivator occasional patches of open country for the plough. The capital is Tumlung, where the Raja resides from November to May, when he moves to Chumbi, on the Thibetan side of the hills.

TIPPERA.—This State is an ancient stronghold of Hinduism, Tippera. and from 1279 to 1620 held out bravely against Mahomedan aggression. In early times human sacrifices, associated with the worship of Siva, were prevalent. Up to the time of Raja Dharma Manik (1407), it is said that no less than one thousand victims were annually offered up. From 1620 to 1765, Tippera was subject to the Mahomedan Power. In the latter year it came under British protection, Krishna Manik being made Raja in succession to the former Mussalman Governor.

The succession of the Rajas of Tippera, when disputed, is now settled by our ordinary courts of law.

A royalty paid on the capture of wild elephants is a source of revenue to the State. In 1875, eighty-six wild elephants being captured and sold at an average price of Rs. 850, the State was credited with a sum of Rs. 24,000 under this head.

The present Raja is an amateur photographer and painter; and has exhibited considerable taste and aptitude for scientific pursuits.

KUCH BEHAR.—This little State was founded about three hundred years ago. Its relations with the British Government date from 1772, when the Raja Dhirjinder Narain, having put his brother to death, was carried away by the Bhutias and placed in confinement. The succession was then disputed, when one party appealing to the East India Company for aid, concluded a treaty by which Kuch Behar acknowledged its subjection to the British, and surrendered half its territory. A son of the captive Raja succeeded to the chiefship under British protection.

The present Raja is a minor, and is being educated at the Patna College, under the supervision of an English Tutor. His State, in the meanwhile, is being managed by the Commissioner of Kuch Behar.

TRIBUTARY STATES OF ORISSA.—These petty States, enumerated in the margin, were ceded with the rest of Orissa by the Mahrattas to the British Government in 1803-4. The Chiefs administer civil and criminal justice under the control of the Superintendent of Tributary States, at Cuttack, whose office was created in 1814. An appeal against the Superintendent's decision lies to the Government of Bengal.

The Treaty engagements entered into by these Chiefs are generally of the following nature :—That, besides holding themselves in submission and loyal obedience to the Imperial Government, they shall, on demand, surrender any residents of Orissa who may have fled into their territories, as well as any of their own subjects who may have committed offences in British territory ; that they shall provide supplies for British troops passing through their States, and that, when called upon, they shall furnish a contingent of troops for imperial service.

PETTY STATES OF CHOTA NAGPUR.—These petty States were finally ceded to the British Government by the Mahrattas in 1826. Separate engagements have been taken from each Chief, binding him to the right administration of the judicial and police powers entrusted to him. Practically the powers of the Chiefs in criminal suits are limited to the infliction of seven years' imprisonment. An appeal lies from the decisions of the Chiefs, to the Commissioner of Chota Nagpur.

Chapter IV.—RAJPUTANA.

MEWAR.*—The ancient house of Mewar, or Udaipur, represents the elder branch of the Suryavansi, or Children of the Sun. Mewar. Raghuvasi is another patronymic derived from a predecessor of Rama, from whom all the solar lines are made by the genealogists to radiate. The titles of many of these families are disputed; but the Hindu tribes yield unanimous suffrage to the Prince of Mewar as the legitimate heir to the throne of Rama, and style him Hindua Suraj, or Sun of the Hindus. His is universally allowed to be the first of the thirty-six† royal tribes; and no doubt as to his claim to its headship has ever been raised. His position, therefore, as the crowning ornament of the Hindu aristocracy, is quite beyond all question or rivalry.

Save Jaisalmir, Mewar is the only dynasty that has survived eight hundred years of foreign domination in its original holding. The Maharana still rules over nearly the same extent of territory which his ancestors possessed when Mahmud of Ghazni first crossed the blue waters of the Indus.

The earliest tradition of the family records the treacherous murder of the sun-worshipping king of Mewar while his pregnant wife was absent on a pilgrimage. On her return she gave birth to a son (probably in the second century of the Christian era) in a cave in the mountains of Mallia, and handing him over to a Brahmini woman, she mounted the pyre to rejoin her lord. Camlavati, the Brahmini foster mother, designated the baby "Goha," or 'Cave-born,' the eponym of the Gohilôt, or Gehlôt race. The child was a source of perpetual uneasiness to his priestly protectors. He associated with the Bhil children, killing birds and hunting wild beasts, and at the age of eleven was quite unmanageable:—for "how," says the legend, "should they hide the ray of the sun?" At this period the neighbouring state of Edar was ruled by a Bhil chief. The young Goha, expert in woodcraft and hunting, became a favourite among the simple children of the forest ; and the Bhils, having determined in sport to elect a king, the choice fell upon him. Accordingly, one of the young savages cutting his finger, applied the blood,* as the tika of sovereignty, to the forehead of the royal lad : and what had been done in idle sport was gravely confirmed by the aged forest chief. The sequel fixes upon Goha the stain of ingratitude ; for he slew his benefactor, and the legend assigns no motive for the deed. The eighth in descent from Goha, Nagadit, was slain by the Bhils, who grew tired of their foreign rulers : but his infant son was preserved by the descendants of the Brahmini woman Camlavati. This child was the heroic Bappa Rawal, (said by the genealogists to be eightieth in descent from Rama) who founded the Gehlôt dyansty in Mewar, A. D. 728. Since then upwards of sixty princes, lineally descended from Bappa, have sat on the throne of Chitôr.

In 1201, Rahup changed the title of the tribe from Gehlôt to Sisodiya,† and that of its chief, from Rawal to Rana.

In the sixteenth century, the Ranas of Mewar were at the height of their greatness. When marching to battle, Rana Sanga was followed by eighty thousand horse, nine Raos, one hundred and four Rawals and Rawats, and five hundred war elephants. The princes of Marwar and Jaipur did him homage ; and the Raos of Gwalior, Ajmir, Sikri, Raesen, Kalpi, Chanderi, Bundi, Gagraon, Rampura and Abu served him as tributaries. He defeated the Mahomedans in eighteen pitched battles, in two of which he was opposed by the Emperor in person.

In Udai Singh's reign Akbar captured Chitôr : and the Rana fled and founded the present capital, Udaipur. His successor, Pertab, waged incessant war with Akbar, and Rana Umra, the next Chief, although he held out stubbornly for a time, was at length obliged to yield. The Emperor Jehangir himself thus records the humiliation of the Chief :—" On Sunday, the 26th,

* This singular ceremonial is still preserved. A Bhil still anoints a newly-invested Rana with his blood.—Vide Historical Sketch of the Princes of India.

† The origin of this name is referred the trivial incident of the expelled prince of Chitôr having erected a town to commemorate the spot where, after a hard chase, he killed a hare (sissu).

“ the Rana, with respect and due attention to etiquette, as other vassals of the empire, paid his respects to my son” (afterwards Shah Jehan), “ and presented a celebrated ruby, well known in possession of this House, and various arms inlaid with gold, with seven elephants of great price, which alone remained after those formerly captured, and also nine horses, as tribute. My son received him with princely generosity and courtesy. When the Rana, taking my son by the knee, begged to be forgiven, he raised his head, and gave him every kind of assurance of protection, and presented him with suitable dresses of honor, an elephant, horses and a sword.”

From 1806 to 1817, Mewar was ravaged by the Mahrattas and by Amir Khan's freebooters. In 1817, on the suppression of the predatory bands that were desolating Rajputana and Central India, it was resolved to extend British protection over the various principalities: and Mewar was brought within the pale of the new Empire.

Lead, iron, tin, silver and copper are found in Mewar. At Jowar there are old zinc mines, now unworked, but which formerly yielded a good revenue.

The majority of the people call themselves Rajputs; but there are three wild tribes, occupying the several hill ranges,—the Mhairs on the North-west, the Bhils on the South, and the Minas on the North-east.

The present Maharana's father was a nephew of Maharana Sarup Singh, and his mother is a Jôdha Rahtor, daughter of the Thakur of Raluda, of the Kishengarh family.

JAIPUR.—Dhola Rai, who founded Jaipur in A. D. 967, is said Jaipur. to have been thirty-fourth in descent from Rama.

Raja Bhagwan Dass, nineteenth in succession from Dhola Rai, gave his daughter in marriage to Prince Selim, afterwards Jehangir.

The nephew and successor of Bhagwan Dass was Man Singh, whose brilliant services to the Moghal Emperor were rewarded by his being invested consecutively with the governments of Bengal, Behar, and the Deckan.

Jai Singh I., who bore the imperial title of ‘ Mirza Raja,’ was equally distinguished. He was murdered, however, by his brother, Kirat Singh, at the instigation of the Emperor, who became jealous of his influence.

In 1699, Jai Singh II. succeeded to the State. This remarkable man, who bore the imperial title of 'Sewai,' transferred the seat of government from Ambar, the ancient capital, to the present city of Jaipur. He was an eminent mathematician, and a painstaking and accurate astronomical observer.

The two succeeding rulers combined with the princes of Mewar and Marwar in resisting the extension of the Mahomedan power. Yet no sooner was the Delhi sovereignty broken, than the depredations of the Mahrattas crippled and impoverished the State, a condition of affairs rendered all the more serious by the extravagance and profligacy of Jaggat Singh, who succeeded in 1803.

Jaggat Singh was succeeded by a posthumous son, Jai Singh III., who died in 1835, leaving as his heir an infant seventeen months old, Ram Singh, the present Chief.

Maharaja Ram Singh is one of the most enlightened princes in India. From 1869 to 1875 he was a member of the Legislative Council of India. In recognition of his praiseworthy exertions towards the relief of the Rajputana famine of 1868, he received an addition of two guns to his salute. His splendid hospitality to more than one Viceroy and to H. R. H. the Prince of Wales will not be forgotten.

This great State, which has an area equal to that of Hanover, now enjoys a mild but efficient system of administration.

Jaipur is one of the cleanest, best lighted, and most beautiful cities in India.

A force of about 5,000 cavalry and 16,000 infantry is maintained.

Marwar.

MARWAR.—The Rahtor,* like the Sisodiya clan, belongs to the Suryavansa, or solar race, and claims descent from the heroic Ram. It can be traced back to Nain Pal, who founded the Canouj dynasty, on the banks of the Ganges, about A. D. 470. This ancient line ruled Canouj for upwards of seven hundred years ;

* The Rahtors claim descent from Mulrai, fifty-sixth in descent from Rama. Mulrai having no son, propitiated the goddess Rathesuri by the performance of an irksome ritual, and received the fulfilment of his wishes. The child was called Rath after the goddess, and bar, a gift, hence Rathbar, corrupted perhaps into Rahtor.

being at length overthrown by Shahabudin Ghorî in 1193. Eighteen years afterwards, Sevaji, grandson of Jaichand, the last ruler of Canouj, set out with two hundred retainers, ostensibly for the purpose of making a pilgrimage to the shrine of Dvârîka, but probably with the real intention of seeking his fortunes in fresh fields of adventure. This prince first obtained a footing among a community of Brahmans, who held the city of Pali, with extensive precincts. His son and successor, Asthan, enlarged his territories by conquering the neighbouring chiefs, and won for his brother, Soning, the State of Edar.

Chondaji, the tenth in succession from Sevaji, wrested Mandôr, the ancient capital of Marwar, from its Purihar ruler in 1381. Chondaji's successor, Rao Rirh Mall, was a famous soldier and ruler. His son, Jôdha, founded the present capital of Jôdhpur in 1459.

Udai Singh (1584), fourth in succession from Jôdha, acknowledged the supremacy of the Moghal Emperor, and gave his sister in marriage to Akbar.

The three next Chiefs, Sur Singh, Gaj Singh and Jeswant Singh, were distinguished soldiers and statesmen, leading the imperial armies of Delhi to repeated victory, and governing great provinces in the name of the Emperor. Jeswant Singh indeed left behind him a name that will never die, while the Rajputs continue to value and honor the memory of glorious ancestors and countrymen. This chieftain had almost every qualification that can strengthen and dignify the position of a great feudal lord. A bold and generous soldier, a skilful leader, an astute, active and fearless politician, a scholar and a patron of learning, he conciliated in peace and war the affection and respect of every class of his people. He reigned for forty-three years. Towards the close of his career he had incurred the fierce resentment of Aurangzeb, and, on his death, Marwar passed for a time under the dark shadow of foreign domination. But the posthumous child of Jeswant Singh, born in exile, amid the snows of Afghanistan, inherited the vigour and courage of his father, added to a passionate hatred for the Power that had alienated his ancestral State. Ajit Singh had one aim in life—to recover Marwar; and through a long course of years, in the face of incredible difficulties, he steadily pursued this purpose to a completely successful issue, and seated himself on the throne of Jôdhpur. Ajit Singh was the fourth heroic prince upon whom the sovereign honors of Marwar devolved in direct succession. Few States, or royal races, can boast four such Chiefs, immediately following one another, as Sur Singh, Gaj Singh, Jeswant Singh and Ajit Singh. But Ajit Singh's career closed in a terrible tragedy, that leaves a lasting stain on the annals of the Rahtor clan. His own sons, Abhi Singh and Bakht Singh, murdered him for a paltry bribe offered by the Court of Delhi. Both the parricides succeeded to the throne; and, strange to say, we read that the second, Raja Bakht Singh, a man of colossal stature, was generous, intrepid, and well versed in the literature of Rajwarra.

In 1791, during the reign of Bijai Singh, one of Sindia's armies, under De Boigne, defeated the allied forces of Rajputana, and Marwar lost for ever the fort and city of Ajmir, and had to pay a war indemnity amounting to sixty lakhs of rupees.

In 1818, Rajah Man Singh concluded a treaty with the British Government; and Marwar became a Protected State.

Marwar is one of the largest States in India. Its area is greater than that of Ireland. A great portion of it consists of vast treeless tracts of grass and thorny jungle, the grazing and breeding grounds of immense herds of cattle and camels. The horses of Marwar are highly prized by the chiefs and nobles, who adhere to the haute école of the Indian manège.

Although the revenue of the Durbar only amounts to about twenty-five lakhs, the rent of Crown lands, alienated for religious purposes, and in free grants, exceeds fifty lakhs, or half a million sterling.

Kota.

KÔTA.—In 1620, Shah Jehan conferred Kôta and its dependencies, on Madhu Singh, a younger son of Rao Raja Ratan, of Bundi, in recognition of kindness received by himself while a prisoner, and for distinguished services rendered in the Deckan and Cabul.

Raja Mokand Singh succeeded to the State in 1657. At the battle of Ujein this prince with his four brothers led his vassals, clad in their saffron-coloured garments, and wearing the bridal coronet, signifying death or victory. The five princes fell; but the youngest, Kishôr Singh, was dragged from amongst the slain, and though covered with wounds, lived to ascend the throne, and be a distinguished imperial leader in the Deckan.

In 1769, the successful termination of a war with Jaipur brought conspicuously to notice a young noble, Zalim Singh, connected by marriage with the ruling family. From commander-in-chief of the troops he rose to be minister, and soon showed himself as capable in the conduct of affairs as in the disposal of troops in the field. His tact, discretion and force of character steered Kôta, through the storms of Mahratta invasion, and Pindarri rapine, safe into the calm waters of British protection. While every other part of Rajputana and Central India was desolated by hordes of plundering troopers, Kôta not only enjoyed an immunity from invasion, but the highest prosperity.

Kôta is a rich and well-watered country. The capital occupies a strong position overlooking the Chambal. In the hilly tracts there are extensive game preserves, where the Maharao can generally show his guests a royal tiger.

BIKANIR.—This State was founded about 1488 by Bikaji,* Bikanir. son of Rao Jôdha, who founded Jôdhpur. Bika died in 1504, and seven devoted queens perished on the funeral pyre.

In 1538, Kamran, son of the Emperor Babar, invaded Bikanir; but was defeated and driven out of the country. A few years later, however, Rao Kallian Singh was expelled from his State by the Chief of Marwar, and was obliged to seek the help of the Emperor Sher Shah to recover his dominions. Henceforth Bikanir became feudatory to the Moghal, and several of its chiefs held high military command under the Emperors, and married their daughters into the imperial family. In the contest for the throne between the sons of Shah Jehan, the Chief of Bikanir espoused the cause of Aurangzeb, and two of his sons covered themselves with glory in the desperate battles that ensued. In the last fight with Prince Dara they exhibited such conspicuous gallantry that the Emperor, with his own handkerchief, brushed the dust off their persons, as they stood before him hot from the battle.

* This State was not named, it is said, after the Chief; but from two Baghôr Rajas, Bika and Nara, who pointed out the site.

After the treaty of 1818, by which Bikanir was taken under British protection, the State was overrun by the Pindarries, and a British force had to be introduced to restore order.

In 1845, on the outbreak of the first Sikh war, the troops of Bikanir were placed at the disposal of the British Government ; and in recognition of his loyalty, two nine-pounders, fully equipped, were presented by Government to the Maharaja.

In 1857, the Chief of Bikanir rendered distinguished services to the British Government, co-operating with General Courtland at Sirsa, Hansi, and Hissar ; and in acknowledgment 41 villages were bestowed upon him.

The greater portion of Bikanir is desert. The State cannot boast a single river or stream, and there are no forests. The villages are far apart, forming infrequent oases girdled with good grazing grasses and jungle bushes. Water is found at great depths in most parts of the State. Near the cities the wells are more than three hundred feet deep.

The capital is situated in a slightly elevated, but most desolate and barren spot. The soil is hard, stony and quite unfit for cultivation. The city wall is three-and-a-half miles in circuit, built throughout of stone, with five gates and sally ports. It is six feet thick, and from fifteen to thirty feet high. Within there is an appearance of considerable prosperity, there being many good houses faced with red sandstone richly carved. The population is estimated at 36,000.

Though local famines are frequent in Bikanir, and a general famine occurs at least once in ten years, the mass of the people possess no stores of grain. The whole agricultural community is wretchedly poor, a prey to authorised and unauthorised plunderers, and to all the calamities that the rigours of a climate terrible in every extreme bring in their train.

Bundi.

BUNDI.—Rao Deva, who founded Bundi in 1342, wresting it from the aboriginal Minas, was, according to tradition, lineally descended from Anhul, or Agnipala, the first Chohan. His successors extended and consolidated their conquests, till their dominions stretched from Tonk, in the north, to Malwa, on the south.

With the other States of Rajputana, Bundi became tributary to the Moghal Empire, and several of its chiefs held high commands in the imperial service. In Jehangir's time, Rao Raja Ratan, of Bundi, at that time serving in the Deckan, was charged with the Emperor's son, Prince Kharam, as his prisoner. The Rao Raja's second son, Madhu Rao, lightened the captivity of the prince, who, on succeeding to the throne, as Shah Jehan, evinced his gratitude by conferring upon him Kôta, the southern portion of Bundi, as a separate Principality.

Bundi was one of the first Rajput States that threw in its lot with the British Power. It stood by us during the disastrous retreat of Monson in 1804, and again in 1818 it co-operated with our troops against the Pindarries.

A great part of Bundi is barren and rocky. The capital is situated in a gorge among the hills. The palace on the hill above presents a curious and picturesque group of buildings climbing up the hill-side.

The present Maharao Raja is a courtly prince of the old school, punctilious in business, and scrupulous in all matters connected with his religion.

KARAULI.—The Chief of Karauli is the head of the Jadon Karauli clan, which claims descent from Krishna, and claims the style of Yaduvansi, or Moon-born. It has always remained in or near the country of Brij, round Mathura, and once held Biana, which was taken from it by the Mahomedans in 1053.

Karauli, which was founded by Raja Arjan Deo in 1348, was conquered by the King of Malwa in 1454; and afterwards by the Mahrattas, who exacted a Tribute of Rs. 25,000, which was transferred by the Peishwa to the British Government, and remitted under the terms of a Treaty concluded in 1817.

Raja Gopal Dass is said to have laid the foundation of the fort at Agra by the command of Akbar, the soothsayers having declared that the hand of a descendant of Sri Krishna would ensure its stability.

Maharaja Madan Pal was loyal during the Mutiny, and his salute was increased from 15 to 17 guns. He was a Knight Grand Commander of the Star of India.

Bharatpur. BHARATPUR.—This is the principal Jat State in India. It was founded by Brij, a freebooter who owned a village near Dig. His great grandson, Suraj Mall, who greatly extended the State by conquest, was surprised and killed by a body of Moghal Horse while hunting near Delhi in 1763; he was succeeded by four of his five sons, the two first of whom were murdered. During the reign of the third, Nawal Singh, the fourth son, Ranjit Singh, heading an insurrection, invoked the assistance of Najaf Khan, of Delhi, who seized the entire State, except the fortress of Bharatpur. Here Ranjit Singh held out, and his mother interceding, obtained for him from the intruder a grant of land valued at nine lakhs of rupees. On the death of Najaf Khan, Sindia seized the whole country, including Bharatpur; but Ranjit's mother again interposing, Sindia ceded to Ranjit Singh eleven pargannas, to which three more were subsequently added for services rendered to General Perron. These fourteen pargannas now form the State of Bharatpur.

After the battle of Dig (1805), Jeswant Rao Holkar took refuge with Ranjit Singh, who, retiring with him into Bharatpur, defied the British forces. Lord Lake was four times repulsed in assaulting the fortress, and lost 3,000 men; but Ranjit Singh, anticipating defeat, surrendered, and expelled Holkar from his territory.

In 1826, a British army, under Lord Combermere, again besieged and took Bharatpur, on the occasion of Balwant Singh, the rightful heir (father of the present Chief), being seized and imprisoned in the capital by his cousin, Durjan Sal.

This part of India is popularly known as Brij, or the Land of Krishna, and the language is the patois known as Brij-Bhasha. The cities of Dig and Bayan are very ancient, and full of interesting remains.

The present Chief succeeded to the hereditary honors of his family when three years of age. During his minority the administration was carried on by a Political Agent and Council of seven Sirdars. His Highness is a firm and energetic ruler.

Tonk.

TONK.—Amir Khan was born in 1766. His grandfather was a Pathan of the Bonair, who, as a soldier of fortune, took service in Rohilkhand. The story of this great partisan captain is the history of Central India during the stormy commencement of the present century. Beginning life as a petty mercenary leader, he rose in 1798 to be commander of a great independent army in the service of Jeswant Rao Holkar, whose fortunes he followed, until that prince became insane, being employed in the campaigns against Sindia, the Peishwa, and the British Government. In 1806, he transferred himself and his army to the Raja of Jaipur, then at war with the Chief of Marwar; and after crushing the latter, changed sides, and reduced the former. While serving the Raja of Marwar he twice convened large assemblies of persons obnoxious to his employer with the most solemn assurances of good faith, and then deliberately assassinated them, receiving large sums of money for the crime. In 1810, he was the chief actor in the sacrifice of the beautiful princess of Mewar to the wounded vanity and jealousy of the rival chiefs of Marwar and Jaipur. In 1817, for a bribe of Rs. 7,00,000, he caused the death of the minister and high priest of Marwar. In the same year Lord Hastings determined to restore order in Rajputana and Central India, and offered Amir Khan the sovereignty of the districts conferred upon him by his first employer, Holkar, on condition of his disbanding his army. To this he consented, the British Government purchasing his artillery and entertaining some of his cavalry.

His son and successor, Wazir-ud-Daula, rendered good service in the Mutiny. This Chief was succeeded by Md. Ali Khan, who, in 1867, was deposed for causing twelve of the relatives and retainers of his principal feudatory to be assassinated in cold blood.

The State consists of the six enclaves of Tonk, Rampura, Nimbahera, Pirawa, Chapra and Seronge, scattered over Rajputana and Central India.

The Nawab of Tonk is the only Mahomedan chief in Rajputana.

KISHENGARH.—The sovereignty of this State was conferred Kishengarh. upon Kishen Singh, second son of Maharaja Udai Singh, of Marwar, by the Emperor of Delhi, in 1594. The subsequent history of Kishengarh furnishes us with little of interest or importance. After the treaty of 1818 was concluded, it was discovered that Maharaja Kallian Singh was suffering from mental aberration, sometimes exhibiting itself in obstinacy and fractiousness, sometimes in unreasonable fears. At one time he was engaged in open hostilities with his nobles, and at another he fled for refuge to Delhi. Eventually he abdicated in favor of his son, to the great comfort of all parties.

The Maharaja of Kishengarh was loyal during 1857 ; and he continues to earn the esteem of the Imperial Government by his admirable administration. One of his daughters is married to the Maharana of Mewar, and another to the Maharao Raja of Alwar.

Alwar.

ALWAR.—The founder of this State was Pertab Singh, a Naruka Thakur, whose original holding in Mewat consisted of two* villages and a half situated on the southern border of the present State, then part of the territory of the Maharaja of Jaipur, in whose service Pertab Singh won high distinction as a man of vigour, courage and address. In the war carried on by Mirza Najaf Khan with the Jats, he united his forces at an opportune moment with those of the Mirza's, helped him to defeat the enemy at Barsana and again at Dig ; and, in recognition of his services, obtained the title of Rao Raja, with a sannad conferring upon him the sovereignty of his patrimonial estate, Macherri. At a subsequent period (1776), availing himself of the weakness of Bharatpur, he wrested from it the strong hill fort and fortified city of Alwar.

Pertab Singh lived for about twenty years after this to enjoy the principality he had carved out for himself. He was succeeded by a distant kinsman whom he had selected to be his heir from an estimate of his personal qualities. Fortunately for this Chief, Laswarri, the scene of Lord Lake's great victory, was but 17 miles east of Alwar, and as Bakhtawar Singh had rendered some nominal assistance, it was deemed convenient to confer upon him certain districts forfeited by the enemy, and which now form the northern districts of Alwar. This raised his revenue from seven to ten lakhs. Bakhtawar Singh left no legitimate issue ; but his natural son, Balwant Singh, was placed in possession of the Mewat territory, or northern districts, by the British Government, while a kinsman, Bani Singh, whom he had shown some intention of adopting, was elected chief by the nobles. On

* Macherri, Rajghar and Rajpur.

Balwant Singh's death, the northern districts lapsed to Bani Singh, who, dying in 1857, was succeeded by his son, Sheodan Singh, from whom the State has passed in its integrity to the present Maharao Raja, Mangal Singh, a boy distantly connected with the ruling family, who was chosen in 1874, on the death of Raja Sheodan.

This young Chief has just attained his majority, and great hopes are entertained for his future.

The fine palaces, gardens and tanks of Alwar, overlooked by the picturesque fort perched on a hill, 1,000 feet in height, attract many visitors, now that the Rajputana State Railway passes by. The fine collection of horses in the Chief's stud* is also an object of great interest, as are the curious oriental library and armoury, and the rich collection of jewels.

DHÔLPUR.—The Chief of this small Jat State is descended from the Ranas of Gohad, who held their position as such for twelve generations, embracing a period of 278 years. Their territory during this period gradually increased till it comprised fifty-six districts, yielding a revenue of sixty-six lakhs of rupees. These Chiefs were staunch opponents of the Mahomedans and Mahrattas, and for five generations struggled gallantly against their big intruding neighbour, Sindia. Immediately after the battle of Panipat, they seized Gwalior, but in 1783 Sindia recovered it, and seized the ancestral domains of Gohad, imprisoning the Rana, Chatarpat. In 1803, however, Kirat Singh, son of Rana Chatarpat, after being a homeless wanderer for nineteen years, was replaced in Gohad by the British Government: but, in 1805, it was decided to cede Gohad to Sindia, the Rana receiving in exchange the smaller state of Dhôlpur.

The present Maharana has been brought up among English influences; and has turned out a fine, bright, manly boy. He speaks English fluently, rides well, and is fond of all out-door sports.

JAISALMIR.—The Jadu Bhattis, to which the Rawals of Jaisal-mir belong, are a very ancient race. Like the Rahtors, it is probable that they were one of the Indo-Scythic tribes who entered Hindostan about 100 B. C.

* The Alwar stud at present consists of seven stallions, sixty-one brood mares, one hundred and twenty-one colts and fillies, three hundred and four saddle horses, and seventy-three carriage horses. Thirty-four elephants and one thousand five hundred and forty-eight camels are also maintained on the establishment of this Chief.

In A. D. 1156, Jai Sal founded the fort* and city of Jaisalmir† on a low ridge of sandstone hills, as being more strongly situated than Lodorwa,‡ his former residence, which was in the open plain. In 1294, the plundering raids of the Bhattis so enraged Alla-ud-din that the imperial army seized and sacked the fort and city of Jaisalmir.

Rawal Sabbal Singh, 25th in succession from Jai Sal, was the first of his line who acknowledged the supremacy of the Mahomedan empire.

Mul Raj was the first Chief who entered into political relations with the British Government. A Treaty was concluded with him in 1818.

§ The greater portion of this principality is a desolate waste, presenting a succession of sand-hills of considerable height, clothed with coarse grasses and stunted shrubs of acacia or mimosa. To the south the sand-hills give place to low rocky ridges and hard undulating plains.

Water is found at a depth of from 200 to 400 feet; and is generally of a brackish quality. Like Bikanir, Jaisalmir is destitute of running water. Millet, sown during the rainy season, forms the staple article of food.

Jhallawar. JHALLAWAR.—The existence of this State only dates from 1838, when Kôta was dismembered to provide a principality for the grandson of the great Minister, Zalim Singh. Maharaj Rana Madhan Singh, who died in 1847, was the first Chief. His successor, Pirthi Singh, rendered good service in the Mutiny.

The family is descended from the petty chieftains of Halwad, in Guzerat. The present Chief is a mere boy, studying at the Rajkumar College, Ajmir.

Capital tiger-shooting is to be had in Jhallawar.

But best of all the Bhatti built, the fort of Jaisalmir."

§ An interesting account of Jaisalmir will be found in the Geographical Magazine for November 1874, p. 316.

PARTABGARH.—The Maharawats of Partabgarh belong to a Partabgarh. junior branch of the Mewar family. Their ancestor, Salim Singh, was so great a favorite with the Emperor Mahomed Shah, that he was permitted to exercise the sovereign function of coining money. Of this privilege the Partabgarh Chief largely availed himself, and issued coins still current in Malwa and Rajputana, called Salim Shahi rupees, worth about twelve annas each. On the establishment of the Mahratta power in Central India, Sawant Singh, son of Salim Singh, became a tributary of Holkar's. This relationship continued until, by the treaty of Mandisur, the allegiance of the Maharawats was transferred from Holkar to the British Government.

The population of Partabgarh is chiefly composed of Bhils and other predatory tribes, whose disorderly habits frequently disturb the tranquillity of the State and its neighbours.

DUNGARPUR.—The Maharawal of Dungarpur is a lineal Dungarpur. descendant of Mahasji, who, about the end of the 12th century, relinquished his claim to the throne of Chitôr in favour of his younger brother, Rahasji, in accordance with the dying wish of their father, Kuramsi.

Sebardi, 9th in descent from Mahasji, became a semi-independent Chief, with Baroda (in Dungarpur) for his capital, in 1248, ruling in virtue of authority derived from the Emperor of Delhi. His grandson, Bir Singh, transferred the seat of government to Dungarpur. Udai Singh, 9th in descent from Bir Singh, died from wounds received in battle, and with his last breath divided his country into two portions, giving that part west of the river Mahi to his eldest son, Pirthi Raj, and that to the east to his younger, Jag Mall. These two divisions represent the present States of Dungarpur and Banswarra.

BANSWARRA.—This State is an offshoot from Dungarpur. In Banswarra. 1812, Rawal Umed Singh offered, through the Resident at Baroda, his allegiance to the British Government, with a tribute of three-eighths of the revenue of his country, on condition of receiving aid to expel the Mahratta followers of Scindia, Holkar and the Puars. Subsequently easier terms were granted as a return for the aid and protection extended.

The inhabitants of Banswarra are almost all Bhils of the wildest and most turbulent character.

Serohi.

SEROHI.—The Chohans of Serohi entered this part of the country, immigrating from Delhi, in the 11th century.

Rao Cismall, from whom the present Chief is 22nd in descent, first established himself in Serohi.

In Rao Surtan Singh's time the Mahomedan ruler of Guzerat and Alla-ud-din Ghorri overran Serohi, and desecrated the holy places of Mount Abu.

Maharaja Man Singh, of Marwar, repeatedly attacked Serohi in the reign of Rao Bairi Sal. But the Chiefs of Serohi, though often worsted, and though their territory has shrunk to insignificant proportions, have never abandoned the inexpugnable fastnesses of their wild, rocky hills.

The remains of former prosperity scattered over the State form a sad historical record. Everywhere the ruins of ancient cities, villages, wells, tanks and temples, remind the traveller of happier days.

Mount Abu rises to a height of 4,500 feet. It was ceded to the British Government by the Rao of Serohi, on condition that no cattle, pigeons, or pea-fowl should be killed within its precincts. In 1845, a sanitarium was established upon it : and for some months of the year it is now the residence of the Agent of the Governor-General for Rajputana. It is covered with innumerable shrines ; and is regarded by the Jains as a place of the greatest sanctity.

Shahpura.

SHAHPURA.—The ruling family of this petty State is descended from Suraj Mall, third son of Maharana Amar Singh of Mewar. Sujan Singh, son of Suraj Mall, obtained a grant of land and certain sovereign rights from the Emperor Shah Jehan, on condition of furnishing a contingent of horse and foot in time of war.

Shahpura is a flat and treeless plain, but fertile, and affording excellent pasture for cattle.

The Chief is a feudatory of the British Government, as well as of the Maharana of Mewar.

Chapter VI.—CENTRAL INDIA.

INDÔR.—The father of Malhar Rao, the founder of the Hôlkar Indor. family, was a goatherd and weaver of blankets of the Dhangar, or Gadri, tribe, who lived at Hôl, a village near Phaltan,* in Nimbalkar. His name was Kandaji. His wife seems to have belonged to a somewhat better class; for her brother, Narayanji Bargul, is described as a small landholder. On the death of Kandaji, the widow, with her boy, Malhar Rao, then about five years of age, removed to the house of Narayanji, who lived in Talanda, a village of Khandesh. This was probably about the year 1697 or 1698. The future hero was employed by his uncle in tending sheep. According to a family tradition, while engaged in this duty, his life was miraculously saved by a cobra. Overcome with the stillness of the warm summer afternoon, the shepherd lad lay down and slept careless of shade, with the terrible rays of the Indian sun beating full on his face. A cobra seeing the danger interposed his expanded hood between the sleeper's face and the sun. Narayanji put a most favorable construction on the omen, and determined to rescue his nephew from the obscurity and poverty of his condition, and raise him to the honorable station of a cavalry soldier. Now Narayanji owed feudal service to the noble house of Bandi; so he placed Malhar Rao in command of the contingent with which he was bound to furnish that family. At this time the Mahrattas were at war with the great Mahomedan power in the Deckan; and Malhar Rao, having the good fortune to slay a commander in the army of the Nizam-ul-Mulk, rose at once to distinction. His uncle gave him his daughter, the beautiful and talented Gotama Bai, in marriage; the Peishwa elevated him to the command of five hundred horsemen; and the Bandi Chief permitted him to assume the colours† of the Bandi family. This was about 1724. Quite fulfilling the high promise of his early military career, he rose rapidly to the greatest position in the Mahratta State militant; and, in 1735, we find him in charge of all the armies of the Peishwa to the north of the Narbadda, with Indôr and a great portion of Malwa assigned to him for their support. Through many vicissitudes of fortune the descendants of the goatherd's son have held that grant.

The subsequent career of this great commander is one prolonged predatory war. At one time he appears under the very walls of Delhi, plundering indiscriminately the buyers and sellers who have assembled for the great fair of Khalka Bhowani. We next find him near Agra escaping with difficulty, in a saue qui peut flight, after a crushing defeat inflicted by the Moghals under Barhan-ul-Mulk. Again he is falling upon a great imperial convoy, and carrying away coaches, jewelled robes, gold and silver vessels, shawls and trinkets of inestimable price belonging to Malika Zemana, the Emperor's consort. In 1751, he is co-operating with his old enemies, the Moghals, against the Rohillas; and fighting with the same desperate gallantry that first gained for him a name and a command. The Emperor of Delhi now confers upon him rank and estates, and he becomes Deshmukh of Chandôr in Khandesh. A few years afterwards, however, he is lying near Secundra, with his terrible light horsemen and countless camp followers. Their ponies are laden with an indescribable variety of loot. All are ready to start at a moment's notice,—to march anywhere their leader may conduct them; to cross the Jumna and descend into the far-spreading corn-fields of the Doab, or to plunge into the wilds of Rajputana;—to march, if need be, through the long hours of darkness, bringing a morning of fearful confusion and disaster to some far away village. But the night is dark; a foraging party of Ahmed Shah's Afghans stumbles on the lair of the Mahrattas; there is a moment of furious slashing of sabres, heedless galloping in the darkness, shouting and neighing of horses, and the army of Malhar Rao is scattered to the winds.

But Mahratta armies know how to reassemble; and the great Holkar is soon flashing through the country again in his wild orbit of desolation. Panipat is the closing scene of his military career. Early in the day his squadrons appear on the field; they are remarkable for their steadiness. They are well in hand; their great commander is among them, and they trust him. But early in the day he sees how the tide of fortune is turning, and before the retreat has turned to a rout, he withdraws his contingent, and retires to the west.

For the remainder of his life Malhar Rao devoted himself to the task of reducing to coherence and order his great possessions in Malwa. He died at the advanced aged of seventy-six, leaving an imperishable name in the annals of his countrymen.

Malhar Rao had only one son, Khandi Rao, who was killed, in 1754, at the siege of Kambhir, near Dig. This prince had married into a family whose surname was Sindia, and by his wife, Ahalya Bai, he had one son and one daughter. The former, Mali Rao, though insane, was at once recognised as the successor of his grandfather: but he only survived nine months, and the government of the State passed to his mother, who for thirty years ruled Indôr. This wonderful woman, for her piety, her elevation of character, her profound sense of duty, her great ability, and her amazing energy and activity will bear favorable comparison either with the greatest administrators of her country, or with the brightest ornaments of her sex in any land.

“A perfect woman, nobly plann’d
To warn, to comfort, and command;
And yet a spirit still and bright
With something of an angel-light.”*

Sir John Malcolm says, with reference to Ahalya Bai:—“The more enquiry is pursued the more admiration is excited; but it appears above all extraordinary, how she had mental and bodily powers to go through with the labours she imposed upon herself, and which from the age of thirty to that of sixty, when she died, were unremitted. The hours gained from the affairs of State were all given to acts of devotion and charity; and a deep sense of religion appears to have strengthened her mind in the performance of her worldly duties. She used to say that she deemed herself answerable to God for every exercise of power.”—Although our surprise and admiration are primarily aroused by her marvellous energy and force of character as exhibited in the administration of the vast territories committed to her care, we are more touched by the many stories that tell of her love and tenderness in watching and nursing her insane son, and of her inconsolable sorrow on his death. Nor did this charming softness of character belong to her only as a mother, for we read that the lofty affection she felt, as a sovereign princess for her people, was displayed in a vigilant regard for their happiness and welfare, and in countless acts of private charity and royal munificence. This great princess was succeeded by her Commander-in-Chief, Tukaji, who belonged to the Holkar tribe, but was not related to the family of Malhar Rao. Tukaji only survived his mistress two years.

He left four sons, Khasi Rao, (an idiot), and Malhar Rao, legitimate: and Wittoji and Jeswant Rao, illegitimate. The Peishwa nominated the imbecile Khasi Rao successor; and the legitimate brother, Malhar Rao, was assassinated. Malhar Rao left a son, Khandi Rao, who was imprisoned. Jeswant Rao, however, ignored the succession of his imbecile half-brother, and assumed the Regency in the name of his nephew, Khandi Rao, who being subsequently poisoned, left Jeswant Rao in possession of the nominal and real power of the State. This prince at Fattegarh, Dig and Bharatpur measured swords with the British, and was ultimately compelled to surrender himself to Lord Lake, declaring that his "whole kingdom lay upon his saddle-bow." To his surprise, the British Government restored to him the whole of his possessions which he had forfeited. He returned to Indôr, and devoted himself with great ability and energy to the task of reorganising his army, and reforming the administration of his State. The excitability of his temper, the overstrain of self-imposed work,* and excessive drinking brought upon him the awful calamity of madness. He died insane in 1811. Grant Duff sums up his character in these words:—"The chief feature of Jeswant Rao's character was that hardy spirit of energy and enterprise, which, though like that of his countrymen, boundless in success, was not to be discouraged by trying reverses."

On Jeswant Rao becoming insane, the Regency was assumed by Tulsa Bai, his favorite mistress, a woman, according to Malcolm, remarkable alike for her beauty, for the fascination of her manners, and for the quickness of her intellect. . But notwithstanding the prodigal gifts of nature, she failed to retain the allegiance of the people; while her arrogance and open immorality alienated the regard of those who were otherwise disposed to support her. The troops mutinied; everything fell into confusion; the command of the army passed into the hands of some Pathan officers, who, seizing the person of the youthful Chief, assassinated the Regent. Tulsa Bai was thirty years of age when she was beheaded on the banks of the Kshipra, on the 20th of December 1817. On the following day the Holkar army, under its Pathan leaders, was totally defeated by a British force at Mehidpur. Malhar Rao, the young Chief, was present at the battle, seated on an elephant. When he saw his troops flying he burst into tears and entreated them to return. Then followed, on the 6th of January, the treaty of Mandisur, when the sovereignty of the Holkar family was finally determined, and the State brought within the pale of British protection.

The debauchery and folly of Malhar Rao, and the incapacity and misconduct of Hari Rao, need not be dwelt upon. Khandi Rao only reigned for three months, and, on his death, there being no lineal heir, and no one who possessed the right of adoption,* it remained with the British Government to select a successor; and the Resident at Indôr was instructed to effect this selection in such a manner as to show that it was the sole Currie, Secretary to Government of India, announcing demise of Khandi Rao, dated 17th February 1844. From Secretary to Government to Sir C. Wade, Resident, Indôr, dated 1st March 1844, instructing him to permit the Mah Sahiba to carry on the administration, pending the selection of an heir. From Secretary to Government to R. N. C. act of the British Government. Departing from his instructions, however, he declared that the younger son of Bhao Holkar being pointed out as a fit representative of the family by the Mah Sahiba (Hari Rao's mother), and the Governor-General having a great respect for that princess, her choice was approved and confirmed by the Government of India. The Government of India not finding it convenient to repudiate and stultify the action taken by its representative at Indôr, the younger son of Bhao Holkar succeeded, without further question, to the family honors.

This prince, Maharaja Tukaji Rao Holkar, G.C.S.I., has proved himself a capable ruler. His acquaintance with the details of the native system of finance, is unsurpassed. His two sons are receiving their education at the Residency (Rajkumar) College, Indôr.

Dewas.

DEWAS.—This State has two Chiefs. They claim kindred with the Puar Rajputs ; but the purity of the race has been lost by intermarriage with Mahrattas.

Babaji Puar, Patel of Maltan, near Puna, had two sons, Kaluji and Sambaji ; they were cultivators of the soil and silladars ; and they both attained distinction in the service of the great Sevaji. Sambaji is the ancestor of the Dhar House ; and Kaluji of the Dewas family. Kaluji had two sons, Tukaji and Jiwaji, to whom the Peishwa conjointly assigned Dewas and other districts.

The Chiefs of Dewas were loyal during the Mutiny.—Raja Krishnaji Rao Puar, Baba Sahib, now represents, through a series of adoptions, the family of Tukaji, the elder son of Kaluji. This Chief is married to a daughter of Maharaja Sindia. His portion of the State is under British management.

Raja Narayan Rao Puar, Dada Sahib, who represents the younger branch of the family, is a minor. He is being educated at the Residency (Rajkumar) College, Indôr.

Baghli.

BAGHLI.—The Thakur of Baghli is a Rahtor Rajput. The founder of the family was Gokal Dass, a servant of the Nawabs of Bhopal, and subsequently an adherent of both Malhar Rao Holkar and Ranoji Sindia.

This State pays a tribute of Rs. 16,471 to Sindia.

The present Chief, Thakur Raghunath Singh, is receiving his education at the Residency (Rajkumar) College, Indôr.

DHAR.—Sambaji Rao Puar, spoken of in the notice of Dewas, Dhar. had a son, Anand Rao, who, in 1749, received the assignment of Dhar from Baji Rao Peishwa. For twenty years previous to the British conquest of Malwa, this territory was repeatedly overrun and despoiled by the great Mahratta leaders, and it would have utterly disappeared as a distinct principality, but for the determination and energy of Mina Bai, wife of Anand Rao, fourth in descent from Sambaji.

In 1857, Dhar was confiscated for rebellion ; but the Government of India was pleased, as an act of grace, to confer the territories formerly pertaining to the Chiefship, with the exception of the district of Beirusia, transferred to Bhopal, upon Anand Rao, a half-brother of the late Raja. For four generations no lineal heir has succeeded ; so it has been found necessary to draw again and again on the old stock at Malvan.

The present Chief is a Knight Commander of the Star of India.

JHABUA.—The Chiefs of Jhabua are Rahtors of the great Jhabua House of Jôdhpur. The founder of the family was Kishen Dass, who rendered good service to the Emperor Alla-ud-din. The Moghal Governor of Guzerat was murdered at the instigation of the Bhil Chief of Jhabua ; and Kishen Dass was deputed to avenge the crime and the insult. This he accomplished in the fullest manner, and the Emperor conferred upon him the State of Jhabua, with high titles and royal insignia. When the Mahrattas, however, swarmed over Central India, Jhabua was stripped of its richest lands, and its exchequer was reduced to the lowest ebb. But in 1818, through the mediation of Sir John Malcolm, the State was restored to some of its pristine prosperity, and the money tribute payable to Holkar was commuted to an assignment of land.

There are about twenty-four families of Umraos, or feudal lords, under the Chief.

BARWANI.—The Chiefs of Barwani are Sesodiya Rajputs, Barwani. claiming kindred with the ancient family of Chitôr. Their history is enveloped in obscurity. According to local tradition, they settled on the banks of the Narbadda in the 11th century ; but it is probable that this settlement was not made until the 14th, or 15th century.

Paras Ram, 15th in ascent from the present Rana, opposed the advance of the imperial armies on Malwa, and was carried away prisoner to Delhi, where he consented to embrace Mahomedanism on condition of his being permitted to return to his ancestral State. On his return he retired into seclusion ; and was succeeded by his son, Bhim Singh. The Mahomedan tomb that Bhim Singh erected over his father's remains may still be seen at Awasgarh.

In 1705, Barwani is said to have extended from the Narbadda to the Tapti ; but all that now remains of these great territories is a narrow strip of the Satpura range, eighty miles in length, with the low lands on either side ; those to the north between the hills and the Narbadda being alone inhabited. Throughout the State the scattered remains of forts, towns and irrigation works testify to the ancient prosperity of Barwani.

Ali Rajpur. ALI RAJPUR.—The ruling family of this State belongs to the Sesodiya clan of Rajputs. We know nothing of their early history. In 1818, the State, as tributary to Dhar, received a British guarantee. Dhar, however, ceded these rights to the British Government in 1821, in lieu of a money payment, and Ali Rajpur is now tributary, directly, to the Imperial Government.

This little principality is situated in the extreme south-west corner of Central India, abutting upon the Rewa Kanta group of Bombay States. It lies among wild hills and jungles, and is peopled, almost exclusively, by Bhils.

The present Rana, Rup Deoji, is assisted in the administration of his territory by a Minister nominated by the Imperial Government.

Jobat. JOBAT.—The Rana of this petty State is nominally a Rahtor Rajput;* the family, at some very remote period, having been founded by a member of the Jôdhpur House.

* Many of the Chiefs of these remote and petty States, where the population is nearly entirely Bhil, have a strong taint of Bhil blood.

It is a little State of wild, hilly country, inhabited by Bhils. It is immediately dependent on the Imperial Government.

The Rana, Sarup Singh, is a student of the Residency (Rajkumar) College at Indôr.

JAORA.—The territory forming this chiefship was originally Jaora, assigned to the great partisan Captain, Amir Khan, for the support of troops placed at the disposal of Jeswant Rao Holkar. When Amir Khan left Malwa, he consigned this grant to the care of his brother-in-law, Ghaffur Khan, who, being in possession at the time of the battle of Mehidpur (1818), was recognised as Chief of the territory by Article 12 of the Treaty of Mandissôr. Ghaffur Khan was succeeded by his son, Gheus Mahomed Khan, whose loyalty in 1857 has given the family a claim upon the regard of the Paramount Power.

The present Chief, Nawab Ismael Khan, was educated under the supervision of an English tutor.

RATLAM.—The Chiefs of Ratlam are Rahtors of the Jôdhpur Ratlam family. Ratan Singh, great-grandson of Maharaja Udai Singh, of Marwar, displayed courage and address in arresting the destructive course of a mast elephant in the crowded streets of Delhi; and he was rewarded by the Emperor with the assignment of twelve districts in Malwa. He accordingly came to that province and founded Ratlam. The assignment was commuted to a free grant in perpetuity when Ratan Singh was killed in battle, fighting in support of Shahjehan against Aurangzeb.

The State is tributary to Sindia; but payment is made through the British Government, upon whom have devolved all the concomitant feudal rights.

During the minority of the Chief, the State is under British management.

Raja Ranjit Singh is studying at the Residency (Rajkumar) College, Indôr.

Ratlam is the chief opium mart of Malwa.

SILLANA.—The ruling family of Sillana is an offshoot from Sillana. Ratlam. The first Chief of the State was Jai Singh, grandson of Raja Chattar Sal, of Ratlam. The separation from the parent principality took place in 1709.

Raja Duli Singh has recently suffered the amputation of a leg affected with cancer.

Sitamau. SITAMAU.—Ram Singh, the elder son of Ratan Singh, founder of Ratlam, was supplanted by his abler brother, Chattar Sal, and was assigned that portion of his father's territory now forming the State of Sitamau.

On the establishment of British supremacy in Malwa, in 1818, Sir John Malcolm mediated for the Raja of Sitamau, inducing Sindia to renounce all claims on the State, on receipt of a fixed annual tribute payable through the British Government.

Raja Raj Singh received a dress of honor, valued at Rs. 2,000, for his fidelity during the Mutiny.

Bhopal. BHOPAL.*—Dost Mahomed, a soldier of fortune, the founder of the Bhopal family, was an Afghan of the Miraji Khel tribe. At an early age he entered the service of the Emperor Aurangzeb; and serving with a detachment of the imperial army in Malwa, he soon brought himself to the notice of the Governor of that Province by his conspicuous gallantry. His advancement was very rapid. He possessed all the qualities that ensure success in stormy times. He was brave, adventurous, ambitious and unscrupulous. In 1690 he was appointed by the Delhi Government Superintendent of the District of Bhairsia, and availing himself of the confusion that arose on the death of Aurangzeb, he declared himself Nawab of the territory, which, partly by his good sword, partly by stratagem, and partly, it is said, by treachery, he had acquired in the lifetime of his imperial master. This territory, after the principal town within its limits, he named Bhopal. He died in 1723.

Dost Mahomed was succeeded by his son, Sultan Mahomed, who soon abdicated, however, in favour of his elder, but illegitimate brother, Yar Mahomed. There is little worthy of note in the career of this Nawab, but it will be proper to speak here of his consort, Mamulla, who, for upwards of half a century,

* The accomplished Princess who now rules Bhopal has written a history of her State, which has been translated into English by Mr. Baretow, of the Bengal Civil Service, for some time Officiating Political Agent at Sehôr.

under the title of Maji Sahiba,* greatly influenced the fortunes of Bhopal. Malcolm says of her :—"It seems difficult to pronounce whether she was most remarkable for the humanity of her disposition, or for the excellence of her judgment. She was beloved and respected by all. Her memory is still cherished by the natives of Bhopal; and it is consoling to see, in the example of her life, that, even amid scenes of violence and crime, goodness and virtue, when combined with spirit and sense, maintain that superiority which belongs alone to the higher qualities of our nature."

Yar Mahomed's three sons, Faiz Mahomed, Yassin Mahomed, and Haiat Mahomed became rulers of Bhopal in succession.

Faiz Mahomed embraced a life of religious austerity and devotion, abjuring all sensual indulgence. Malcolm tells us that his intellectual and his physical strength were in the inverse ratio to each other. His stature was gigantic. He was nearly seven feet in height, and his hands, when he stood up, reached below his knees. He never, but once, went beyond the precincts of the palace. He died when about forty-eight years of age.

His brother, Yassin Mahomed, only survived him a few days.

The third brother, Haiat, was, from disposition and habits, a religious recluse; and the exercise of power continued with the person who held the office of Minister. In 1778, Général Goddard's detachment passed through Bhopal, receiving every aid and mark of friendship. Thus the family of Dost Mahomed established at an early period a claim upon the British Government. Subsequently, Bhopal was overrun by plundering bands of Pindarries, and invaded by the Mahrattas; and with its weak Chief and innumerable intriguers preying upon its vitals, it would have disappeared from history had not a young cousin of the Nawab, Vizier Mahomed, escaping from banishment, stepped in and rescued his country. The great talents, courage, and engaging qualities of this young prince succeeded in clearing the dominions of his family from both Mahrattas and Pindarries. But his great abilities and popularity excited the jealousy of Ghous Mahomed, who succeeded to the throne on the death of his father, Haiat Mahomed ; and, in order to oust him, he invited the Mahratta Chiefs of Gwalior and Nagpur to occupy the State. This policy was fatal to his hopes, for Vizier Mahomed at once rose to the position of champion of his countrymen, and became virtual ruler, while the Nawab Ghous Mahomed sank into complete obscurity.

* This lady had no children, and was never publicly married to the Nawab: but the ceremony of Nika was performed on the occasion of their union; and this engagement, though inferior to marriage, is deemed respectable by Mahomedans.

Vizier Mahomed was the founder of the present family. He died in 1816, and was succeeded by his son, Nazzar Mahomed, who married the Kudsia Begam, the daughter of Ghous Mahomed. This aged princess still lives to see descendants of her own in the fourth generation.

With Nazzar Mahomed, in 1817, the British Government formed a close alliance, for the purpose of suppressing the Pindarries ; and his death, in 1820, was deeply regretted as that of a gallant soldier, an enlightened ruler, and a firm ally. He was killed by the accidental discharge of a pistol, fired by his brother-in-law, a child eight years of age.

He left one child, the Sikandar Begam, who was married to her cousin, Jehangir Mahomed, in 1835. This Nawab, trying to secure for himself absolute power in the State, raised the standard of rebellion ; but he was attacked and defeated by a force sent against him by his wife and mother-in-law. He died in 1844, and the sole power remained in the hands of his wife ; who, on her demise, in 1868, was succeeded by her daughter, the present ruler.

Nawab Shah Jehan Begam, G.C.S.I., has been twice married. By her first husband, Bakshi Baki Mahomed Khan, she has a daughter, Sultan Jehan Begam, who is recognised as the heiress apparent. Her present husband is Mahomed Sadik Hussein. He had previously married a daughter, still living, of the Minister, Jumal-uddin Khan, and had thus obtained a position of some importance in the State. He has now received the title of Nawab ; and is recognised by the Government of India as Consort of the Begam.

The famous Buddhist topes of Sanchi are at Kana-Khera, 26 miles north-east of Bhopal.

RAJGARH.—The ruling family of Rajgarh are Umat Rajputs. Rajgarh. The present Chief, however, professes Mahomedanism, and has relinquished the title of Rawat for that of Nawab, conferred upon him, in 1872, by Government. The State dates from the 15th century.

Rajgarh is a mediatised tributary of Sindia's; all feudal rights, together with the receipt of the tribute, having lapsed to the Government of India.

Rawat Moti Singh, alias Nawab Mahomed Abdul Wasi Khan, changed his religion in 1871.

NARSINGARH.—The ruling family of this State are Umat Raj- Narsin- puts, being an offshoot from Rajgarh. The separation from garh. Rajgarh took place in 1660.

Ajjab Sing was hereditary Minister of Rajgarh, being descended from Dudaji, younger brother of Rawat Uda Sing. He succeeded in prevailing upon his master and kinsman, partly by threats, and partly by fraud, to dismember the State, apportioning him those territories now forming Narsingarh.

The seat of Government was formerly at Patan.

In 1827, Chain Sing, owing to a difference with the Resident, attacked the Residency at Sehôr, and was killed in the fight that ensued.

The Government of India conferred the title of Raja upon Hanwant Sing in 1869. This Chief's daughter is married to the present Maharaja of Marwar.

Narsingarh is a mediatised tributary of Holkar, the tanka being paid through the British Government.

KARWAI.—The founder of this State was an Afghan adven- Karwai. turer named Mahomed Dalel Khan. About 1726 he obtained service with the Raja of Basonda, rose to be Commandant of the forces, and, on the death of the Chief, seized the State. He built the fort of Karwai.

During the decline of the Moghal Empire this State was equal if not superior in extent to Bhopal; but the Mahrattas reduced it to the lowest ebb of misfortune.

On the death of Dalel Khan, it was divided between his sons; the elder, Izzat Mahomed Khan, receiving Karwai; and the younger, Ahsan Ulla Khan, Basouda.

- Basouda. BASOUDA.—In 1817 Sindia seized this State; but it was restored through the intervention of Government. Nawab Asad Ali Khan was for many years Minister of Bhopal; but being convicted of intriguing to interfere with the succession to that State, he was sentenced by the British Government to banishment to Benares for ten years and a fine of Rs. 25,000. He returned to his State and died in 1864. His eldest son, Nawab Amar Ali Khan, is the present Chief.
- Mahomedgarh. MAHOMEDGARH.—This petty principality, a portion of the original principality carved out by Mahomed Dalel Khan, lies between Bhilsa and Rahatgarh. It is under British guarantee; and pays no tribute.
The present Chief, Nawab Hafiz Kuli Khan, is a descendant of the younger branch of the House of Karwai.
- Maxudanghar. MAXUDANGHAR.—The ruling family of this State are Khichi Rajputs. They acknowledge Sindia as their feudal lord.
Raghunath Singh, the present Chief, is imbecile.
- Kilchipur. KILCHIPUR.—This State is tributary to Sindia, the payment being made through the British Government.
The title of Rao has been conferred upon the present ruler, Amar Singh, since his accession, by the Government of India.
- Pathari. PATHARI.—Haidar Mahomed Khan obtained Pathari in 1807 from Sindia, in exchange for certain villages in Rahatgarh.
The present Chief, Abdul Karim, succeeded his father, Haidar Mahomed Khan, in 1861; but, being a minor, his mother assumed the office of Regent, which she held until her son attained his majority, in 1873.
Pathari adjoins the British district of Sagar.
- Ragughar. RAGUGHAR.—The Chief of this wild little State belongs to the Kaichi clan of Chohan Rajputs.
In 1780, Madhoji Sindia, having imprisoned the Raja Balwant Singh and his son, Jai Singh, hostilities commenced, which lasted till 1819, when, through the mediation and guarantee of the British Government, Sindia gave up to the Chief the town and fort of Ragughar, with lands supposed to yield more than a lakh of revenue, on condition that any sum over Rs. 55,000 should be paid to the Gwalior Durbar; which, on its part, engaged to make up any deficiency. In 1843, on Sindia objecting that the jaghir was not properly managed, the original arrangement was annulled, and fresh engagements entered into, by which the territory was distributed among the three principal members of the family, Bijai Singh, Chattar Lal, and Ajit Singh.

The present Raja, Jaimandal Singh, succeeded to Ajit Singh's share; and holds 120 villages, yielding an annual revenue of some Rs. 24,000.

PARÔN.—Raja Maun Singh, of Parôn, joined the mutineers Paron. in 1857; but surrendered in 1859, on condition of receiving a free pardon and suitable maintenance.

He subsequently gave up the rebel Tantia Topi to Colonel Meade; and, for this service, received a grant of a village in British territory, yielding an annual revenue of Rs. 1,000.

Raja Maun Singh holds his small State under the protection and guarantee of the British Government.

GWALIOR.—There are two conflicting accounts of the origin of Gwalior. the great House of Sindia.* Sir John Malcolm says:—"The family of Sindia are Sudras of the tribe of Kunbi, or cultivators. Ranoji Sindia, the first who became eminent as a soldier, had succeeded to the hereditary office of Patel of Kamerkerrah, in the district of Wai, before he was taken into the service of the Peishwa Balaji Bishwanath, after whose death he continued in that of his son, Baji Rao Belall. The humble employment of Ranoji was to carry the Peishwa's slippers. It is stated that Baji Rao, on coming out from a long audience with the Sahu Raja, found Ranoji asleep on his back, with the slippers of his master clasped with fixed hands to his breast. This extreme care of so trifling a charge struck Baji Rao forcibly; he expressed his satisfaction, and actuated by motives common to men in the enjoyment of such power, he immediately appointed Ranoji to a station in the Paga, or Body Guard."—Malcolm adds in a note that Captain Stewart, Officiating Resident at Sindia's Court in 1819, corroborates this story by observing that Ranoji was said to preserve as a precious memorial of his start in life the slippers he had guarded so faithfully.

* Malcolm I., 116.

The author of *An Historical Sketch of the Princes of India places the founder of this family in a higher social stratum. "The Sindia family," he writes, "were Patels of Kamberkher, near Sattara, and, in the absence of other information, we may judge of their respectability from the circumstance of the Emperor Aurangzeb selecting a lady from the family to give in marriage to the Raja Sahu about 1706, before deputing him to claim his inheritance as sovereign of the Mahrattas. The lady died in 1710, when residing at Delhi with Sahu's mother. It was said of Ranoji that in early life he was a domestic of very inferior degree in the service of the Peishwa—viz., the carrier of his slippers: a story repeated by almost all writers of his history. But as the family had always been Silladars (cavaliers), nothing can be more improbable than that any member of it should serve in a menial office, more especially at a period when the army afforded an ample field for the display of courage, talent and birth."

Whatever the true story may be,†—and the Sindias hold to the slipper story,—it is certain that Ranoji took, at the flood, the tide which led on to fortune. In 1725 he appears as one of the most conspicuous leaders of the Mahratta armies. In 1736, at Delhi, he contributed greatly to the defeat of a body of 8,000 Mahomedan horse. Two years afterwards, he was one of the three commanders who, in the campaign against Nizam-ul-Mulk, led the Mahrattas into action, and to whose genius and valour must be attributed the successful issue that in a great measure founded the fortunes of the three great families of Sindia, Holkar and Puar. On his death, about the year 1750, half of the great plateau of Central India belonged to him, and he enjoyed a personal income of more than sixty-five lakhs, or six hundred and fifty thousand pounds sterling a year.

* Edinburgh, 1833. A work which, though anonymous, is of the highest authority, having been read over and emended, prior to publication, by Mountstuart Elphinstone and Grant Duff.

† It would seem that Madhaji Sindia believed his father to have been the slipper-carrier, for, on appearing at the Court of the second Madhu Rao he with ostentatious humility carried a pair of slippers, saying it was still his occupation as it had been that of his father.

Jankaji,* grandson of Ranoji, now became head of the family ; but he was taken prisoner at the battle of Panipat, and put to death. Madhaji, an illegitimate son of Ranoji, escaped from that terrible fight sorely wounded and lamed for life. He fled to the Deccan, and appeared unattended and in a wretched plight before the Peishwa at Puna to claim his father's lands, half of the rich plains of Malwa, a magnificent kingdom. His claims were admitted ; and he returned to the country north of the Narbadda to commence his great career of conquest, intrigue and spoliation.† Both in Central India and Hindustan Raja after Raja was now laid under contribution, and district after district added to the territory he governed in the name of the Peishwa, and although the share of the latter in those possessions was only nominal, his commands were made the pretext for aggrandisement and extortion. This deference to his nominal master, the Peishwa, and this employment of the Peishwa's name, are most characteristic of Madhaji Sindia. When the virtual sovereign of Hindustan he refused to sit in the Peishwa's presence ; when the unhappy Emperor Shah Alam was to all intents and purposes his prisoner, his attitude to him was almost abject in its servility. Every little Rajput chief he rolled along with him in his career of accretion he treated with all the outward forms of respect due from a subject to a sovereign. His success, however, was neither solely due to the flexibility nor to the force of his character. He had seen English troops,—indeed he had defeated an English force under Colonel Cookburn,—and his quick eye and clear intellect perceived the strength that lay in discipline and uniformity. He turned the loose hordes of Mahratta horsemen into compact brigades ; he exchanged the occasional long gun dragged about by slow teams of oxen for smartly-horsed batteries of artillery ; and he placed all under the command of French and English adventurers.

* Ranoji married in the Deccan, Mina Bai, a woman of his own tribe, by whom he had three sons, Jaipa, Dattaji and Jatoba. Jaipa, the father of Jankaji, was murdered at the instigation of the Mahareja of Marwar ; Dattaji was slain in battle at Radber, near Delhi ; and Jatoba died at Kembar, near Dig. Ranoji had also, by a Rajput woman, a native of Malwa, two sons, Tukaji and Madhaji. Tukaji was slain at Panipat.

† Malcolm.

In 1783 he mediated and guaranteed the treaty of Salbai between the Peishwa and the British Government. In 1794 he died leaving behind him a vast inheritance, and a name to be remembered.

Madhaji Sindia was succeeded by his grand nephew, Daulat Rao Sindia. This prince was not without the ambition and energy of his predecessor; but he over-estimated his strength, and had the ill fortune to measure swords with a Wellesley and a Lake. At Aligarh,* Delhi, Assaye, Agra, Laswari and Argaum, he was taught to moderate his hopes. At the close of this, to him, disastrous year (1803), he signed away, by the treaty of Surji Anjenaom, all his territory between the Jumna and the Ganges; all situated to the north of Jaipur, Jodhpur and Gohad; the forts and districts of Ahmadnagar and Barôch; and his possessions between the Ajunta Ghat and the Godavery. He also renounced all claims on the Emperor of Delhi, the Peishwa, the Nizam, Maharaja Gaikwar, and all the Rajas who had helped the British. These conditions, however, were subsequently modified by other engagements.

Daulat Rao died at Gwalior in 1827 without an heir, and without having adopted a successor. On his death-bed he had, however, left the State and the succession in the hands of the British Government.

A boy belonging to the Sindia family, named Mangal Rao, was selected for the Chiefship, and Daulat Rao's widow, Bazi Bai, assumed the Regency.

Mangal Rao's name was changed to Jankoji. This Chief, who was of a weak and uncertain character, died, like his predecessor, without an heir. But his widow adopted a boy of eight (the present Chief) who belonged to a remote branch of the family. The Mama Sahib, an influential noble, was named Regent. Being unable, however, to make his influence felt and preserve order, he was replaced by another noble, the Dada Khasji-wala. This man was as wrong-headed and incapable as he was restless and treacherous. The army became mutinous. The relations of the Durbar with Government became strained, and a rupture occurred that led to the battles of Maharajpur and Panniar. This cleared the air. The British Government conferred upon the young Chief the State forfeited in the ordeal of war. The turbulent troops were disbanded; and a reconstructed force embodied. Indemnity was taken for the war; and a provision of eighteen lakhs assigned for the maintenance of a British force to preserve order. In 1857, the Gwalior army and contingent mutinied, but the Chief exhibited the courage of his race and an unswerving loyalty to the British Government. In recognition of the service thus rendered, the Government conferred upon him lands yielding three lakhs of revenue, and permitted an increase to his army, which now stands at 48 guns, 6,000 cavalry and 5,000 infantry. Maharaja Jiaji Rao Sindia is a Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath; a Knight Grand Commander of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India; an Honorary General in the British Army; and a Counsellor of the Empress. He has inherited the military instincts of his family; and is, in character, not unlike some of the great Mahratta captains of the olden days.

The State of Gwalior, which has an area equal to that of Ireland, is dispersed in a number of enclaves throughout Central India.

URCHA, OR TEHRI.—This is the oldest and highest in rank of all the Bundela States, and is the only one that was not held in subjection by the Peishwa. When the Chief of Urcha first presented a nazzar to the Governor-General, in 1818, he is said to have remarked that it was the first time the family had acknowledged the supremacy of any other Power. The ruling family are descended from Chattar Sal, a prince of ancient lineage, who, after the death of Aurangzeb, reconquered the greater part of Bundelkhand from the Mahomedans. Uroha, or Tehri.

When the British entered Bundelkhand, in 1812, Raja Vikramajit Mohendar was the ruling Chief of this State. A treaty* of friendship and defensive alliance was concluded with him.

During the Mutiny, Urcha, under the Regency of the Tarrai

Rani, rendered valuable service to the British Government ; and, as a reward for these services, a tribute of Rs. 3,000 was remitted.

A great portion of Urcha is covered with forest and jungle, and is thinly populated.

The present Chief, Maharaja Mohendar Pertab Singh, succeeded his brother, Hamir Singh, in March 1874.

Dattia.

DATTIA.—This State came under the supremacy of the British Government with the other territories ceded by the Peishwa, under the terms of the Treaty of Bassein, in 1802. The ruler at that time was Raja Paricheit. In 1804, a treaty of defensive alliance was concluded with him. After the deposition of the Peishwa, in 1817, this Chief was rewarded for his attachment to the British Government by the grant of a tract of land on the east of the river Sind, and a new treaty was made with him. He died in 1839, and was succeeded by his adopted son, Bijai Bahadur, a foundling. This Chief, dying in 1857, left an illegitimate son, Arjan Singh, but was succeeded by an adopted son, Bhowani Singh, the present ruler.

Dattia is famed for its sword hilts and spear-heads.

Sampthar. SAMPTHAR.—The Chiefs of this State are Gujar Ahirs.

In 1817, a treaty of defensive alliance was concluded with Raja Ranjit Singh. This Chief died in 1827, and was succeeded by the present Raja, Hindupat, who is insane. The heir apparent, Raja Bahadur, manages three-quarters of the State, and the Chief's wife the remaining quarter.

Panna.

PANNA.—The ruling family of Panna claim descent from Hardi Sah, the most noted of the sons of Chattar Sal. The territory of this prince was very extensive, yielding a revenue of upwards of thirty lakhs ; but amid the turmoils of the latter part of the last century it was dismembered, some portions falling to the Mahrattas, and others, as—Chattarpur, Maihir, the Choubey Jaghirs, Alipura, &c.,—to the chief officers and sirdars of the State itself.

Panna is nearly all hill and jungle. Its diamond mines, and its elephant-breeding establishment are famous.

The present Chief, Maharaja Pertab Singh, is an amateur photographer.

CHIRKARI.—Bijai Bahadur, fourth in descent from Chattar Chirkari Sal, lost his State amid the general scramble for territory then going on among the members of his family. But on joining Ali Bahadur,—a grandson of Baji Rao Peishwa, who, availing himself of its disturbed state, invaded Bundelkhand,—he recovered lands yielding about four lakhs of rupees.

Bijai Bahadur was the first of the Bundela Chiefs who submitted to the authority of the British Government, and accordingly a sannad was granted to him in 1804.

During the Mutiny, Bijai Bahadur's grandson, Raja Ratan Singh, remained faithful, protecting European officers. He received in acknowledgment the privilege of adoption, a grant of land, worth Rs. 20,000 a year, in perpetuity, a dress of honor, and a salute of eleven guns. He was succeeded in 1860 by Raja Jai Singh Deo, the present Chief.

BIJAWAR.—The ruling family of this State is also descended from Chattar Sal. When Ali Bahadur invaded Bundelkhand, Raja Birsing Deo, grandson of Chattar Sal, refused to acknowledge his supremacy, and fell, gallantly fighting, near Chirkari. His grandson, Ratan Singh, received a sannad from the British Government in 1811, and subscribed to a deed of allegiance.

Raja Bhau Pertab Singh, the present Chief, succeeded in 1847. For fidelity in the Mutiny, he has received the privilege of adoption, a dress of honor, and a salute.

Bijawar is a hilly tract lying at the foot of an advanced ridge of the Vindhya. The soil is poor. There is a brisk trade in iron stone, which is plentiful throughout the State.

CHATTARPUR.—Kunwar Suni Shah, the first of the Chiefs of Chattarpur, began life as a servant of Hindupat, grandfather of Raja Kishor Singh, of Panna. During the turbulent days when the Mahrattas were in Bundelkhand, Suni Shah seized a large tract of country for himself; and, being found in possession when the British occupied the Province in 1804, he received a guarantee, and eventually a sannad.

In 1827, Government created Pertab Singh, of Chattarpur, a Raja. On his death, in 1854, without a lineal heir, the Court of Directors declared the State an escheat; but, as an act of grace and in consideration of the fidelity of the family and good administration of Pertab Singh, they conferred it, under a new sannad, upon his grand-nephew, Jaggat Raj.

The present Chief, Raja Bishen Nath Singh, is being educated at the Rajkumar School, Nowgong.

Chattarpur is a pretty hill-and-lake country. Excellent swords are manufactured.

Ajigarh.

AJIGARH.—The Chiefs of this State are descended from Jaggat Raj, the younger son of Chattar Sal. The original title was Raja of Banda. The grandson of Jaggat Raj, Raja Bakht Singh, was driven from his territory by Ali Bahadur, and was glad to receive a pension of two rupees a day from the conqueror; but on the British occupation of Bundelkhand, in 1803, he was granted a pension of Rs. 3,000 a month, until an adequate territorial provision could be made for him. In 1807, he received a sannad restoring to him a portion of his dominions; and, subsequently, an adventurer, Lachman Dawa, who had seized a great part of the State, was obliged to surrender the fort of Ajigarh, which, with most of the remaining portion of the principality, was returned to the rightful owner.

In 1855, Raja Bijai Singh died during his minority, and the State escheated to the British Government; but after the Mutiny, the late Chief's mother was permitted to adopt Ranjor Singh, Bijai Singh's illegitimate brother, and Ajigarh was conferred upon him by the Government of India.

Baoni.

BAONI.—The Nawab of Baoni is the only Mahomedan Chief in Bundelkhand. He is descended from Asaf Jah, Nizam-ul-Mulk. The State was originally granted by the Peishwa; but, in 1806 the validity of the grant was acknowledged in a rescript from the Governor-General.

Baoni has suffered much from the inclemencies of the weather,—torrents of rain, alternating with drought,—and also from the spread of a kind of bind-weed, called kans.

Nawab Mehedi Hussein Khan has received a loan from Government to help him to liquidate the debts of the State.

Beronda.

BERONDA, OR PATHAR-KUCHAR.—The Beronda family are

Ragvansi Rajputs of the greatest antiquity; but we have no authentic materials for a sketch of their history.

The State lies across the Ghats just east of Kalinjer. It consists of a wild hilly tract. The seat of Government has been successively at Rusin, Birgarh, Murfa, Beronda and Pathar-Kuchar.

The State received a sannad in 1807.

Raja Ragbir Dyal has recently succeeded his nephew.

SURILA.—Like those of Chirkari, Ajigarh, and Bijawar, the Surila family is descended from Jaggat Raj, the second son of Chattar Sal. The State is a small fragment of the portion originally allotted to Jaggat Raj. The greater portion was seized by the Mahrattas in Ali Bahadur's time.

Raja Khallak Singh was recently adopted from a collateral branch.

ALIPURA.—This State was founded by Achal Singh, a Sirdar Alipura of the Maharaja of Panna. The grant of Alipura was conferred upon him by Maharaja Hindupat.

In 1808, Pertab Singh, then in possession, received a sannad.

Rao Chatrapati is twenty-five years of age.

KUNYADHANA.—The ruling family of this State belong to the Kunyadhana line, being descended from Amar Singh, son of Maharaja Udeit Singh.

Raja Guman Singh received a sannad, delivering an igrar-nama.*

This wild tract is nearly all hill and jungle. It lies to the west of the river Betwa, and south-west of Urcha.

The present Chief, Raja Chattar Singh, is a minor.

THE HASHTBHAYA JAGHIRS.†—The petty Chiefs holding these estates are descended from Dewan Rai Singh, a member of the Urcha family. Dewan Rai Singh left an estate called Baragaon, which on his death he left to his eight sons. Of these eight shares, two were at an early date merged into the remainder; one reverted to Urcha, and a fourth was, in 1841, confiscated for rebellion.

Rewa.

REWA.—According to a family history of the Rewa Chiefs which is kept in the Durbar, it would appear that the original founder of the State was one Bilagar Deo, or Biag Deo, the eponym of Baghelkhand, who, leaving his own State in the Deckan about the year A. D. 580, ostensibly on a religious pilgrimage, but in reality to seize whatever undefended country he could come across, in the first instance made himself master of the fort of Marpha, and eventually of most of the country from Calpi to Chandalghar, and married the daughter of the Raja of Pirhowan. Bilagar Deo was succeeded by his son, Karan Deo, in 615, who added to his possessions a large portion of what now constitutes the State of Rewa, and called it Baghelkhand. He married the daughter of the Raja of Mandla, and obtained in dower the famous fort of Bandoghar, to which he removed the seat of government. All this is an old-world story. If the dates are correct, Karan Deo was a contemporary of the Prophet Mahomed, of our own Cadwallo, whose tongue “hushed the stormy main,” and of Heraclius, who overthrew the second Khusru. But early Hindu historians have a proud disregard for chronology, and it is not impossible that Kalan Deo lived at a somewhat later period, for Bullar Deo, the twelfth Raja,—according to the same authority—succeeded in 1096. He is said to have rendered valuable services to “Timur Shah, Emperor of Delhi,” who in return conferred upon him many honorary distinctions and gave him the fort of Kalingar. We do not, however, find any mention of this Emperor in our histories of India ; but we hope, for the credit of Rewa history, that Taimur Lang is not referred to, as he visited Delhi for the first time three hundred years later (1398).

Birbhan Deo, 19th Raja of Rewa, succeeded in 1601. There were thus only seven Chiefs in a period of five hundred years.

Birbhan Deo is said to have offered an asylum to the family of the Emperor Humayun, when he was expelled from Delhi by Sher Shah. But then Humayun died in 1556.*

In 1618, Vikramaditya became Raja, made Rewa his capital, and built the fort. In the reign of Abdut Singh, the 27th Raja, Hardi Sah, the Bundela Chief of Panna, invaded Rewa and seized the capital. The young Chief and his mother fled to Partabgarh; but after a time, with the assistance of the Delhi Emperor, he was restored to his territories.

It was during the rule of Jai Singh Deo that British influence was established in Baghelkhand, and the first formal treaty was concluded with Jai Singh Deo in October, 1812. It came about in this wise. Overtures, which were made in 1803, after the conclusion of the Treaty of Bassein, were rejected by the Raja. In 1812, however, a body of Pindarries invaded Mirzapur through the Rewa territory. It was believed that the Raja had abetted the enterprise either through deliberate design or weakness, and he was accordingly required to accede to a treaty, by which, while he was acknowledged the ruler of his dominions, he was brought under the protection of the British Government, and bound to refer all disputes with neighbouring Chiefs to British arbitration, and to permit British troops to march through or be stationed in his territory.

Maharaja Raghuraj Singh, the present Chief, is, according to the local annals, the 82nd of his dynasty. In 1847† he abolished satti throughout his dominions. For services rendered in 1857, the districts of Sohagpur and Amarkantak were conferred upon him in sovereignty. In 1862, the Agency was withdrawn from Rewa at his request. In 1863, he ceded with all sovereign rights appertaining thereto lands required for railway purposes. In 1867, he asked the British Government to assist him in effecting certain reforms in his administration; but direct interference was declined on the ground that it was not expedient to relieve him of responsibilities properly devolving upon him as Chief. In 1868, he abolished the system of farming the revenue, discontinued the levying of transit dues, and appointed as his minister Raja Sir Dinkar Rao, K.C.S.I.

In 1873, to avenge an insult alleged to have been offered to the Maharani, His Highness violated the treaty engagements entered into with the British Government ; and despatched into Sohawal an armed force, which plundered a house and murdered one of its inmates. For this offence he was fined Rs. 10,000, and the Sirdars who had aided him in its commission were each fined Rs. 1,000.

In 1875, on representing his inability to manage the affairs of his State, the administration was made over, at his own request, to the Political Agent, aided by the State Minister : but he is now anxious to resume his public duties.

The Rewa territory is of great extent ; half as large again as the principality of Wales—portions of it are almost quite unexplored ; and the resources of its great forests and jungles have as yet been little called upon to relieve the State of the debts with which it has been so long burthened.

Nagod.

NAGÔD.—When the British Government inherited the Peishwa's share of Baghelkhand, Raja Lall Sheoraj Singh was found in possession of this State. He was succeeded, in 1818, by his son, Balbhadar Singh, who was deposed, in 1831, for the murder of his brother. The State was then taken under British management during the minority of his son, Raghubind Singh. This Chief attained his majority in 1838 ; but, becoming involved in debt, the State was retransferred, at his own request, in 1844, to British control.

In 1857, the Raja of Nagôd rendered good service, and was rewarded with the grant of a tract of land from the confiscated estate of Bijai-Ragugarh. He died in 1874 ; and was succeeded by his son, the present Chief, Raja Jadhu Bhind Singh.

Maihir.

MAIHIR.—The Chief of this State belongs to the Jogi caste of mendicants. The founder of the family was originally a humble adherent of the Panna family, who, by industry and intelligence, rose through many offices of trust to one of supreme importance in his master's service, and at length obtained, in recognition of his good work and fidelity, the grant of Maihir.

When, by the Treaty of Bassein, Baghelkhand came under British control, Durjan Singh was found in possession of Maihir. On his death, in 1826, his two sons, Bishen Singh and Prayag Dass, disputed the succession and appealed to arms. The British Government interposed, and arranged matters by partitioning the territory equally between the two brothers, the former receiving Maihir, and the latter Bijai-Ragungarh.

The latter estate was confiscated, in 1858, for rebellion.

Raja Ragbir Singh, the present ruler, was educated at the Government College of Agra. He has been raised from the dignity of Rais to that of Raja, in recognition of the cordial service he rendered during the construction of that portion of the E. I. Railway which passes through his territories, by which he sustained a considerable pecuniary loss in land revenue and transit dues.

SOHAWAL.—About three hundred years ago, the estate of Sohawal formed an integral portion of Rewa territory. It was detached by Fattah Singh, son of Raja Amar Singh, of Rewa, who was dissatisfied with the provision made for him by his father, and determined to carve out a principality and make a name for himself. On the British occupation of Baghelkhand, Rais Lall Aman Singh was found in possession.

The estate is in two distinct enclaves at a distance of ten miles from each other; and separated by the possessions of the Koti Chief.

Rais Sher Jang Bahadur was educated at the Government College of Benares.

KOTI.—In the sannad granted to the Raja of Panna, in 1807, Koti is entered as one of his feudatories. The family is of the Baghela caste, and long held their jaghir, yielding submission to the successive conquerors of Bundelkhand.

In 1810, a sannad was granted to Rais Lal Duniapat, the jaghir then in possession, making him directly dependent on the British Government.

Chapter VII.—BOMBAY.

Khairpur. KHAIRPUR—The present ruling family established itself in 1783, when Mir Fattah Ali Khan Talpur drove out the last of the Kalhora dynasty.

On the annexation of Sindh, the ruling Chief, Mir Ali Murad, was elevated to the dignity of Rais ; but was deprived of the title in 1850 for advancing claims to territory to which he was not entitled.

Kachh. KACHH.—The Jhareja Rajputs, of whom the Chief of this State is the head, are immigrants from Sindh, and descended from the Samma tribe. They are believed to have established themselves in Kachh about the 15th century. Till 1540, Kachh was ruled by three of their leaders, or Jams ; but about that year Khengar, son of Jam Hamir, with the assistance of the king of Ahmedabad, obtained for himself the monarchy with the title of Rao.

Our first treaty relations with Kachh were entered into at a time (1809) when the Rao was insane and held in custody by the Bhayads, or inferior chieftains ; and the engagements, on the part of Kachh, were arranged and concluded by Jemadar Fattah Mahomed, and his son, and a Bania named Hansraj, conducting affairs in the south, who, together, represented the provisional Government.

For the greater part of the year Kachh is practically an island ; being washed on all sides by the sea, or Rann. This dreary waste has been described as an amphibious desert ; for during the monsoon it is submerged. Here and there elevated spots remain beyond the reach of the tide, and are the home of great herds of wild asses and terrible clouds of flies. There are a few low ranges of hills, from which streams flow in the rains. The annual rainfall seldom exceeds 12 inches. There is no timber, but decayed trunks of great size, more particularly in the south, record the former existence of noble forests, and the soil is for the most part sandy, or impregnated with salt.

* Vide Sir BartleFrere's exhaustive article on Kachh, in The Journal of the Royal Geographical Society, Vol. XL., 1870.

Kachh is noted for its embroidery, silver work and masonry. The late Rao was one of the most able and enlightened princes in India ; and the administration of the country is now established on a firm basis.

There are upwards of 200 Bhayads, enjoying an aggregate annual revenue of about Rs. 8,00,000.

PAHLANPUR AGENCY.—There are eleven States* under the control of the Political Superintendent of Pahlanpur.—Pahlanpur, Radhanpur, Warye and Terwarra are Mahomedan ; and the rest Hindu, five being Rajput.

The Pahlanpur Agency.

The total area of the nine smaller States, exclusive of Pahlanpur and Radhanpur, is 3,475 square miles, the population 193,048, and the gross revenues Rs. 2,71,000 per annum.

In Radhanpur the Superintendent merely exercises a general supervision, and only interferes directly in disputes with other States. For the purposes of civil and criminal jurisdiction, the nine smaller States have lately been grouped under six Thana-dars, who exercise the powers of Magistrates of the 3rd class ; and limited magisterial powers have been conferred on such Chiefs as are considered fit to exercise them. The Assistants to the Political Superintendent dispose of cases beyond the powers of these tribunals, with appeal to the Superintendent.

PAHLANPUR.—The Chiefs of this State are of Afghan descent, belonging to the Lohani tribe. Their family name is Heytani. The founder of the family obtained the title of Dewan from the Emperor Akbar, and the provinces of Jhalôr, Sachôr, Pahlanpur and Disa from Aurangzeb. In 1698, however, the Chief of Marwar deprived the ruling Dewan of all his territories, except Pahlanpur and Disa.

The Dewan is tributary to the Maharaja of Baroda ; but, in 1809, the State was brought within the sphere of British influence, and an engagement mediated, by which the tribute of Rs. 45,512 was made payable to the Baroda Treasury through the British Government.

* Altbison

Dewan Zorawar Khan rendered the British Government good service in the Mutiny, in recognition of which a dress of honor was conferred upon him, and the title of Nawab offered. This was declined,—that of Dewan being preferred.

pur.

RADHANPUR.—The Nawab of Radhanpur is a Pathan by extraction. The distinctive appellation of his family is Babi. It is of Persian origin. Bahadur Khan, the founder of the family, came from Sultanabad, near Kandahar, about 200 years ago. His descendants* became military commanders and farmers of revenue under the Moghal Governors of Guzerat; and, in 1723, Jaffir Khan (Safdar Khan) received from Aurangzeb, Radhanpur and other districts. Jaffir Khan's son, Khanji Khan, received the title of Jawan Murad Khan, and was succeeded by his son, Kamal-ud-din Khan, or Jawan Murad Khan II. The Governorship of Guzerat, with the title of Nawab, was conferred upon this Chief by the Emperor Mahomed Shah, of Delhi. But, in 1756, he was besieged by Raghunath Rao, brother of Balaji Rao Peishwa, and compelled to surrender Ahmedabad under an agreement whereby he was to hold his grant of land as a fee from the Peishwa, furnishing a contingent of 300 horse and 500 foot when called upon. A great part of the family possessions was wrested from his sons, Ghazi-ud-din Khan and Nizam-ud-din Khan, by Damaji Rao Gaikwar: but their title to Radhanpur and the other districts, constituting the principality, was confirmed by a sannad.

In 1813, a Treaty of four articles was mediated between Maharaja Gaikwar and the Nawab of Radhanpur, whereby the British Government empowered the former to control the relations of Radhanpur with other States.

Baroda.

BARODA.—Damaji Rao Gaikwar† was a distinguished soldier

* In Aitchinson's Treaties it is stated that Jawan Khan Babi (whether I. or II. is not said) received the grant of Radhanpur, &c. This and the statement that he "usurped" the governorship appertaining to the family differ materially from the local account of these matters.

† It is worth noticing that the word "Gaikwar" is in no sense a title; but merely a surname, or family name. Every member of the House uses the cognomen equally with the head. According to native usage, its application differs in no respect from that of such names as Sindia and Holkar. The Highlanders of Scotland prefix the definite article and attach a titular signi-in the army of Sahu, Raja of Sattara ; and, in 1720-21, while serving with the troops engaged in plundering Guzerat, he was raised to the rank of second-in-command of the royal forces ; and he was also named Shamsheer Bahadur, a title still borne and prized by his descendants. The name of his father is preserved. It was Keroji. He was a confidential servant in the household of the commander-in-chief. This is all we know of the early history of the family now ruling at Baroda.

Damaji was succeeded in his military office and dignities by his nephew, Pilaji Gaikwar, who also received the title of Sena Khas Khel. This was a period of great confusion and excitement in Western India. The Brahman minister, or Peishwa, of the fainéant descendant of the great Sevaji, was gradually assuming the reve nues, authority and dignity that rightfully pertained to his master ; and the commander-in-chief, or Sena-patti, was striving for a share in the plunder. His name was Dhabari. During the turmoils that ensued, the lieutenants of these great officers, soldiers of fortune, in most cases of very humble origin, began to take part in the struggle on their own behalf, and a general scramble for lands and dues and commissions to plunder ensued. Out of this chaos sprang several little worlds ; among others, the principalities of Baroda, Gwalior, and Indôr.

It is curious to note how recently all this occurred. Three generations of men have hardly passed away since the great inheritance of Sevaji was partitioned among adventurers. George II. was King when Pilaji Rao Gaikwar was murdered, fiance to the surnames of such of their Chieftains as are not ennobled. They say "the Macleod," "the Chisholm," "the Mackintosh." But the constitution of a Scottish clan, and its relation to its Chief, find no analogy in a Mahratta State. A Highland chieftain is a patriarch enjoying the inherited honors of a widely-ramified family. "The Macleod" is a chief among Macleods : "the Chisholm" is but the principal member of a great family community of Chisholms. Now a Mahratta Maharaja is not a patriarch, but a hereditary captain, enjoying the transmitted honors and spoils of successful war ; and ruling, for the most part, alien races in a State far from the seat of his forefathers. At one time the phrase "the Sindia" and "the Holkar" used to be employed in official documents ; but this was very properly discontinued on the establishment of closer relations and a better acquaintance with the Chiefs of Gwalior and Indôr.

at the instigation of Maharaja Abhey Singh, of Marwar, then Viceroy of Guzerat, for claiming certain rights and dues which the Moghal deputy had allotted to the Peishwa.

Pilaji was succeeded by his son Damaji. The hereditary commander-in-chief was now a weak and vicious man; so Damaji Gaikwar supplanted him, as the Peishwa had supplanted his master; and in 1732 (when Sir Robert Walpole was minister), Damaji Rao Gaikwar obtained possession of Baroda. In 1753, the Moghal Government of Ahmedabad was entirely subverted, and the province partitioned between Damaji Gaikwar and the Peishwa; the former falling into the position of a tributary of the latter.

Damaji fought with credit at Panipat; and, after an eventful and stormy career of forty years, died in 1768.

He left sons by each of his three wives. His first wife had one son, Govind Rao; but Sevaji, the son of his second wife, a congenital idiot, was the eldest of his children. There was also Fattah Singh, by his second wife, and Manaji by the third. It being the policy of the Peishwa to cripple the rising power of the Gaikwar family, Sevaji, the idiot, was acknowledged as his father's heir, while his brother, Fattah Singh, became regent. Fattah Singh was killed by a fall from a window, and Manaji succeeded as Regent, holding the office until his death, in 1793, when he was succeeded by Govind Rao.

On the death of Govind Rao, his eldest son, Anand Rao, a man of weak intellect, was acknowledged his successor, but the powers of the State were usurped by his illegitimate half-brother, Kanaji Rao Gaikwar, supported by Malhar Rao Gaikwar. To add to the troubles of Anand Rao, his Arab mercenaries were quite beyond the control of the State,—threatening to become dominant indeed. The Government of India was at length obliged to interfere. Malhar Rao was reduced and sent a prisoner to Bombay, Kanaji was transported to Madras, the Arab janissaries were curbed, and ultimately, by treaties concluded in 1802 and 1805, protection and countenance being accorded and submission tendered, Baroda was brought into subsidiary alliance with the Paramount Power, and bound to maintain a contingent of 3,000 sipahis and a battery of European artillery.

Anand Rao died in 1819; and his brother, Sevaji Rao, an incompetent and incorrigible ruler, succeeded. The folly and misconduct of this Chief repeatedly disturbed the relations existing between Baroda and the British Government; and at length it was found necessary to threaten him with deposition, while Government sequestered the district of Pitlôd as a mark of its displeasure.

Sevaji Rao was succeeded by his son, Ganpat Rao, a weak and dissolute Prince. On his death, in 1856, his brother, Khandi Rao, obtained the State. During the Mutiny this ruler rendered us good service; and, on its suppression, Government was pleased to remit the annual payment of Rs. 3,00,000, due by the Baroda State, for the maintenance of the Guzerat Irregular Horse, to mark its sense of his loyalty. Khandi Rao received moreover the Grand Cross of the Star of India.

At the time of Khandi Rao's death, in 1870, his wife, Jamna Bai, was enceinte; but his younger brother, Malhar Rao, was installed in the meanwhile as Maharaja, on the understanding that the posthumous child should be preferred if a boy. A girl was born, however, and Malhar Rao, who had previously been in prison on a charge of instigating an attempt to poison his brother, was confirmed as Chief of Baroda. After three years of intolerable maladministration, it was found necessary to appoint a Commission to enquire into the numerous charges preferred against Malhar Rao; and, on the conclusion of the enquiry, it was decided to grant him a term of seventeen months as a period of probation, during which certain reforms were to be effected.

In 1874, however, before this term of grace had expired, an attempt was made to poison the British Resident at Baroda, and Malhar Rao was strongly suspected of having instigated it. A high Commission, consisting of three Europeans, and three natives—the Maharajas of Jaipur and Gwalior and Raja Sir Dinkar Rao—was appointed to enquire into the charges. The investigation did not clear the character of the Chief, although the members of the Commission were divided in opinion as to the value of the evidence adduced. In consideration of this circumstance, therefore, and in view of the notorious misconduct of Malhar Rao generally, it was deemed best for the interests and credit of the Gaikwar family and for the welfare of the people of Baroda that he should be deposed. This was accordingly effected, on the 22nd of April 1875.

As a fresh acknowledgment of Maharajah Khandi Rao's loyalty, his widow, Jamna Bai, was permitted to adopt an heir. She selected Sevaji Rao, a descendant of Pertap Rao, son of Pilaji Rao.

Maharaja Sevaji Rao Gaikwar, an interesting boy of some fourteen years, is receiving his education under the supervision of an English tutor.

Meanwhile the affairs of the State are being conducted by the eminent native administrator, Dewan Sir T. Mahadeva Rao, K.C.S.I., under instructions from the Agent to the Governor-General.

Cambay.

CAMBAY.*—The founder of this family was Mirza Jaffir Nizam-i-Sani, better known as Momin Khan, the last but one of the Mahomedan Governors of Guzerat. While he held the office of Governor, his son-in-law, Nizam Khan, had charge of Cambay. He died in 1742. His son, Muftakhar Khan, or Nur-ud-Din, who had made an unsuccessful effort to succeed his father in the Government of Guzerat, went to Cambay to collect forces to assert his cause, and there basely compassed the death of Nizam Khan, and assumed the Government of Cambay, which he held till his death, in 1784. In the partition of Guzerat between the Peishwa and the head of the Gaikwar family, in 1752, Cambay fell to the former ; but it preserved its autonomy, and paid its feudal dues to the Mahratta with great reluctance and irregularity. Under the terms of the Treaty of Bassein, the British Government succeeded to the Peishwa's claims on Cambay.

The present Nawab, Hussein Yawar Khan, succeeded his uncle in 1841.

noted on the margin, are in political relation with the British Government, having entered into an engagement of 16 Articles with Colonel Ballantyne, Political Agent, on behalf of the Government of India, in 1812; and again, in 1830, with Colonel Miles. By these engagements the Chiefs agree to pay regularly and punctually through Government their tribute to Baroda and Edar, to live peaceably with their neighbours, to administer justice equally; and finally, (16th Art.), "to obey any orders of Government."

In 1839, a Criminal Court was established in the Mahi Kanta, similar to that previously established in Kattywar, to be presided over by the Political Agent, aided by two or three Assessors, for the trial of heinous offences and crimes committed by the subjects of other States.

The area of the Mahi Kanta is 4,000 square miles, and the population 447,056.

EDAR.—This is the principal State of the Mahi Kanta group. It was founded, in 1729, by Anand Singh and Rai Singh, two brothers of the Maharaja of Marwar. Its history offers us little of general interest. The late Chief was a Knight Commander of the Star of India and a Member of the Legislative Council.

The present Chief is a minor; and is receiving his education under a tutor, appointed by the Director of Public Instruction, Bombay. Meanwhile the State is under attachment and being managed by the Political Agent.

The nobles of Edar hold their estates on military tenure; furnishing a quota of three horsemen for every Rs. 1,000 of revenue. The force maintained by them amounts to about 568 troopers and as many foot soldiers.

KATTYWAR.—The area of this peninsula is about 22,000 square miles; and the population about 2,500,000. The northern dis-

* There are sixty other petty States in the Mahi Kanta, the jurisdiction over which is exercised by Thanadars, appointed by the Political Agent.

tracts of the province are flat and uninteresting ; but the southern are diversified by hills, among which is the granite peak of Girnar, near Junagarh, 3,500 feet high. The whole peninsula is well watered by rivers and streams diverging from the central plateau.

The Chiefs are for the most part Rajputs of the Jhareja, Jhala, Gohel, Jetwa and Wala tribes. Junagarh is the only important Mahomedan State.

Kattywar is divided into four Prants, or counties,—Jhalawad, Hallar, Gohelwad, and Soruth. There are 186 distinct estates ; but only 103 Landlords exercise judicial functions. Some of these are joint proprietors ; so that in certain cases several landlords, or petty chieftains, possess magisterial powers in one State. The inferior estates are grouped under Thanas, and the jurisdiction of their owners having been resumed or surrendered, is exercised by Thanadars, subordinate to the Political Agent.

The Mahomedans conquered the northern portion of the peninsula ; but when their empire dissolved, the Mahrattas, satisfied with claiming occasional tribute on the argument of a flying column, allowed the original Chiefs to re-establish themselves. Eventually, however, the Baroda Chiefs and the Peishwa, who received this irregular tribute, were induced by the British Resident at Baroda to commute it for a fixed payment from each Chief. This arrangement was recorded in a formal tripartite engagement entered into by the British Government, the Mahratta Powers, and the Kattywar Chiefs, and concluded in 1807. In 1817, the British Government inherited the Peishwa's share of the tribute ; and, in 1820, Maharaja Gaikwar was bound to receive his portion through the British Government ; to send no troops into Kattywar, on any pretext ; and to make no demand of any description on the Chiefs except through the Government of India.

Junagarh. JUNAGARH.—The ruling family of Junagarh established their authority about the year 1735. Sher Khan Babi, a soldier of fortune, serving under the Moghal Governor of Ahmedabad, expelled his master's deputy, and carved out for himself the principality his heirs now enjoy.

The Nawab of Junagarh receives from a number of the Kattywar Chiefs a tribute called zortalbi, which is paid to him through the British Government.

The sacred mountain of Girnar, crowned with Jain temples, and the ancient shrine of Somnath—about the sandal-wood gates of which Lord Ellenborough wrote,—are situated in this State.

NAUANAGARH.—The Jams of Nauanagarh are Jhareja Rajputs, immigrants from Kachh. They dispossessed the original and ancient family of Jetwas now ruling in Porbandar. The Jhareja tribe was once notorious for the systematic murder of its female children, to obviate the difficulty and expense of arranging suitable marriages for them, or the alternative dishonor of having grown-up unmarried daughters. But the engagement entered into in 1812 has effectually suppressed the barbarous practice. Nauanagarh.

BHAONAGARH.—The Thakur of Bhaonagarh is a Gohel Rajput. Bhaonagarh. The tribe is said to have entered Kattywar about the year 1200, under their Chief, Sejuk, whose sons were the founders of the principalities of Bhaonagarh, Palitana and Lathi. The capital was founded by Thakur Bhao Singh, in 1842; and he and his grandson, Wakht Singh, raised the State to its present importance.

Thakur Takht Singh, the present ruler, is a young Chief of the highest promise. He was educated in the Rajkumar College, Rajkôt.

DRANGDRA.—The Jhala tribe of Rajputs, of which the Chief Drangdra. of this State is the head, is undoubtedly ancient: but the pedigree of the Raj Sahib is a mere list of names, without facts or dates to give them interest and life. Wankanir puts forward claims to an equality in the clan with Drangdra. Limri, Wadhwan, Chura, Seyla, and Than-Lakhtar are offshoots from Drangdra.

MORVI.—This is an off-shoot from Kachh. The Thakur of Morvi Morvi. owns a small district in Kachh, with a port at Janghi.

Morvi is situated in the district called Machhi Kanta, from the river Machhi, and possesses a coast line high up the Gulf of Kachh, with a port at Wawanya. Frequent disputes arise with Kachh regarding the sea-borne trade.

Wankanir. WANKANIR.—This Chiefship is of the second class; but it claims greater antiquity than Drangdra. The title of the Chief, who is a Jhala, is Raj Sahib.

Palitana. PALITANA.—In the early part of the century this estate was in a very reduced condition, and was farmed to certain Shrawak merchants of Ahmedabad for twenty years. The hill of Shatranjai, which rises above the town of Palitana, is covered with Jain temples, and is the resort of great numbers of pilgrims, for whom a fixed sum is paid annually by the Shrawak community to the Thakur. The Chief is a Gohel Rajput.

Dhrol. DHROL.—This is a small inland State of the second class. It contains 61 villages. The Chief is a Jhareja Rajput.

Limri. LIMRI.—The railway terminus at Wadwan gives access to this State, which, having a rich black soil, produces a large quantity of cotton. The young Thakur Sahib, who was educated at the Rajkumar College, is a promising Chief. Limri is a second class State, with 72 villages.

Rajkot. RAJKOT.—This is a small second-class State, with 60 villages. It is an offshoot of Nauanagarh. The station of Rajkôt is the head-quarters of the Political Agent for Kattywar; and here is situated the well-known Rajkumar College.

Gondal. GONDAL.—Though originally an offshoot of Rajkôt, this is a richer and larger State. It has 180 villages.

Wadwan. WADWAN.—This petty State contains 30 villages: but importance is attached to it from its being the head-quarters of the Assistant Political Agent for Jhalawad, and being a railway terminus.

Porbandar PORBANDAR.—This State contains 103 villages. It is famed for its limestone, which is chiefly quarried in the Burda hills.

The Rewa Kanta. THE REWA KANTA AGENCY.—The only Chief in this Agency, who is entitled to try for capital offences any persons, except British subjects, is the Raja of Rajpipla. The Chiefs of Chota Udaipur, Deogarh Barria, Lunawarra, Sonth and Balasinor only exercise capital jurisdiction over their own subjects. Offences committed in the latter States by foreigners or British subjects, and all offences committed in the petty Mewassi States, are tried by a Court of Justice, established in 1842, which is presided over by the Political Agent.

The total area of the States comprised in this Agency is about 4,600 square miles, with a population of 487,647 souls, and a revenue estimated at fifteen lakhs of rupees. The Chiefs pay in tribute Rs. 1,30,000, of which a sum, amounting to about two-thirds, goes to Maharaja Gaikwar.

RAJPIPLA.—The Chief of this State traces his descent Rajpipla to one Chokarana, son of Saidawat, Raja of Ujain, a Rajput of the Parmar tribe, who, having quarrelled with his father, left Malwa, and established himself in the village of Pipla, in the most inaccessible part of the hills to the south of the present town of Nandôd. Chokarana had an only daughter, whom he married to Mokero, or Mukheraj, a Rajput of the Gohel tribe, who resided in the island of Premgar, or Perim, in the Gulf of Cambay. The issue of this marriage was two sons, Dungarji and Gemar Singhji. The former founded Bhaonagar, and the other succeeded Chokarana. Since that time (about 1470), the Gohel dynasty has ruled in Rajpipla.

When the Moghals invaded Guzerat, the Raja of Rajpipla became a feudatory of the Empire; bound to furnish 1,000 foot and 300 horse. This arrangement remained in force until Abkar took Guzerat in 1572, when he commuted the military service to a scutage of Rs. 35,556 per annum.

This was paid until the Empire began to dissolve (1710), when the payments began to be made irregularly, and were sometimes evaded and withheld.

In 1763, when Rai Singh, a child of seven years of age, occupied the throne of Rajpipla, Damaji Gaikwar, armed with the Peishwa's sanction to plunder the landholders of Guzerat, seized half the revenues of four of the most fertile districts of Rajpipla. These were afterwards released, and a fixed tribute of Rs. 92,000 imposed.

In 1800, Raja Ram Singh, an inveterate drunkard, was deposed by his feudal lord, Maharaja Gaikwar; and, with the

The town, with its lofty, irregular and quaint old houses, adorned with richly carved wooden balconies, is picturesque. The palace, built on the slope of a hill, rises in a fine confusion of battlements and towers above the little capital. Within it is a labyrinth of tortuous passages, suites of small, dark rooms, and narrow and steep staircases.

Sonth.

SONTH.—The Puar tribe of Rajputs, to which the Sonth family belongs, was driven from its early seats in Malwa in A.D. 957, by Hussein Ghorî, and after some vicissitudes of fortune, settled at Jhalôd. According to a local legend, the Emperor of Delhi, hearing of the exceeding beauty of the daughter of Rana Jhalam Singh, of Jhalôd, demanded her in marriage, about the year 1247, and, on her father declining the alliance, he was attacked by the Moghal army, defeated and killed. His son, Rana Sonth, fled to the jungle dominions of a Bhil, called Sutta, and seized his capital, then called Brahmapuri. He changed its name to Sonth, and established a new principality.

This wild, little State, with its turbulent aboriginal tribes, is in a very backward condition. The soil is good over a large portion of the territory : but the Bhils and Kolis prefer idleness and berries to industry and corn.

When the late Raja died, in 1872, his family was not entitled to the privilege of adoption ; but the Government of India, whose unswerving policy it is to perpetuate the dynasties of the native principalities, permitted the widow to select an heir. The family had become so effete that the nearest collateral was found to branch from the main stem fourteen generations back ; and a boy of twelve years was adopted. He is now receiving his education at the Rajkumar College, Rajkôt.

Balasinôr.

BALASINÔR.—The distinguishing cognomen of this family is Babi, or door-keeper, an office held in the imperial court by Sher Khan, the founder of the family. The fifth from Sher Khan was Salabat Khan, who obtained as a grant the districts of Balasinôr and Virpur, with criminal jurisdiction.

The State became tributary to both the Peishwa and Gaikwar. The rights of the former were inherited by the British Government in 1817 ; while those of the latter came under the general adjustment of the Mahi Kanta Tributaries, to which group Balasinôr was then referred, in 1820.

SURAT AGENCY.—This group comprises Dharmpur, Bansda, S u r a t Agency. and Sachin.

DHARMPUR.—The Maharana of Dharmpur is a Sisodiya Dharam-pur. Rajput. It is not known under what circumstances his ancestors first settled in this part of India. The State is called "The Province of Ramnagar."

BANSDA.—Nothing is known of the history of this State. The Bansda Maharawal is a Solunki Rajput.

The tribute formerly paid to the Mahrattas was transferred to the British Government by the Treaty of Bassein.

SACHIN.—The Nawab of Sachin is descended from the piratical Sachin Abyssinian Admirals of Janjira. Balu Miah Sidi ceded the island of Janjira to the Peishwa, in return for the Sachin territory, in 1791, under the terms of a treaty ratified by the British Government. His brother's family stuck to the rock, however, and are still represented by the Nawabs of Janjira.

JOWAR.—Raja Malhar Rao Mukna, Patang Shaha, is one of Jowar. the last Chiefs of the Kôli caste. It is believed, that at a remote period a great part of the Northern Concan was held by Kôli Chiefs or Poligars; but now hardly any record or trace of their power is left. It is probable that Jayaba Mukna, whose capital was Jowar, was one of the most important of these. We know that his son, Nem Shaha, was recognised as Raja of Jowar by the Emperor of Delhi about the year 1341. His country is said to have contained 22 forts, and to have yielded a revenue of Rs. 9,00,000. For three or four hundred years after this, we hear little or nothing of this wild little State. Neither the Moghals, nor the Portuguese, who held the Northern Concan during the 16th and 17th centuries, appear to have claimed any authority over it: but it did not escape the searching rapacity of the Mahrattas. The Peishwas appear to have annexed as much of Jowar as they considered worth having.

Jowar is now under the political supervision of the Collector of Thanna. It pays no tribute.

The capital is a poor village, buried in the heart of the jungle.

The population is almost entirely composed of Warlis, Kalkaris, and other degraded tribes.

Vinchur. VINCHUR.—The Chief of Vinchur is a Dishast Brahman, descended from a gallant soldier, who acquired distinction in the service of the Raja of Sattara. His name was Vittal Rao Shivdeo. The Emperor of Delhi conferred upon him the title of Umditul Mulk Bahadur, and the district of Vinchur. His brother, Khande Rao Vittal, who succeeded him, distinguished himself in the battle Khurda. He died in 1794. His son, Narsing Khande Rao, was raised to the rank of Mutalik; and, commanding the Peishwa's forces, went with Colonel Wallace to Khandeish, to suppress the Bhils. The present Chief, Raghunath Rao, was loyal to the British Government in 1857; and has received the Star of India.

The possessions of this family are scattered over the Nassik, Ahmednagar, and Puna collectorates.

Kolhapur. KOLHAPUR.—The Rajas of Kolhapur represent the younger branch of the family of the great Sevaji, as the Rajas of Sattara represent the elder. In 1700, after the death of Rajaram, Sevaji's younger son, who exercised supremacy during his nephew Sahu's captivity, his widow, Tara Bai, placed her son, Sevaji, in power. But in 1708, Sahu was restored to his rights. Thus there were two Rajas, each claiming the sovereignty. Sahu fixed his capital at Sattara; and Sevaji at Kolhapur. Supported by several powerful Chiefs, the Kolhapur family long maintained their pretensions to supremacy in the Mahratta federation; but by a treaty, in 1731, they were compelled to yield precedence to their kinsmen at Sattara; yet their possessions at Kolhapur were, at the same time, recognised as forming an independent principality. On the death of Rajaram's younger son, Sambhaji, the descendants of the great Sevaji, became extinct, and a boy was adopted, who was seventh in descent from Sevaji's grandfather, Maloji Raja Bhonsle. This adopted son, Sevaji II., ruled for fifty-three years. In 1765, the prevalence of piracy compelled the British Government to direct an expedition against Kolhapur, which resulted in the conclusion of a commercial treaty. The terms of this engagement were, however, not complied with, and it was necessary to threaten the State with another expedition before the Chief was brought to his senses.

In 1817, (Shambhu) Aba Sahib, who succeeded Sevaji II., sided with the British in the campaign against the Peishwa. He was murdered in 1821; and the succession devolved upon his brother (Shahaji) Bawa Sahib. This weak and dissolute ruler signed a treaty in 1826, engaging to follow the advice of the British Government, and rule with equity: but failing to observe its stipulations, Government found it necessary to visit him with a mark of its grave displeasure, and he was deprived of the districts of Chikori, Manoli and Akiwat, and obliged to admit British troops into his forts, and to accept a Minister appointed by Government. During the minority of Sevaji III., who succeeded on the death of his father, in 1838, the greatest confusion arose, and on the Minister nominated by Government attempting to restore order, a general insurrection broke out and spread to Sawant Wari. This was vigorously suppressed, the forts were dismantled, the troops disbanded, the system of hereditary garrisons abolished, and the management of the State assumed by the British Government. In 1862, the Chief was re-invested with sovereign powers, and a new treaty concluded.

The sad death of the next Chief, the amiable Rajaram, at Florence, will be remembered by our readers.

The present Chief is receiving his education under the supervision of an European governor, a Member of the Bombay Civil Service.

This State lies along the abrupt and rugged mountains of the Sahyadri range. Sea breezes, heavy rains, dense mists rising from the deep valleys or wafted up from the Indian Ocean, and a general altitude of nearly 2,000 feet are the chief climatic circumstances.

SAWANT WARI.—The Chief of this State traces his descent from Khem Sawant Bhonsle, who, freeing his country from the Mahomedan yoke, expanded into a principality the holding of which he was hereditary Deshmukh.* Khem Sawant ruled over Wari from 1675 to 1709. He was a contemporary of Sahu, the grandson and successor of Sevaji, and received from Sahu a sannad confirming him in the full sovereignty of his possessions, and assigning to him, conjointly with the Chief of Colaba, half the revenue of the Salsi Mahal. His successor, Phond Sawant, concluded an offensive and defensive treaty with the British Government against the notorious piratical Chief, Kanoji Angria, of Colaba. The eldest son of this Chief raised an insurrection against his father, and was shot in action. Phond Sawant was inconsolable; and abdicated in favour of his grandson, Ram Chandra, son of the undutiful Nar Sawant. Ram Chandra was succeeded by his son, Khem Sawant "the Great." This Prince, who ruled for forty-eight years, married a daughter of Jiaji Rao Sindia. The emperor of Delhi conferred upon him the title of Rai Bahadur. In 1765, the British Government, provoked by attacks made on merchant ships by piratical vessels of Sawant Wari, fitted out a small expedition against Khem Sawant, who was soon glad to make peace on any terms. A treaty was accordingly concluded, by which the districts lying between the Karli and Salsi rivers from the sea to the foot of the Sahyadri range were ceded to the British Government; and a war indemnity of one lakh of rupees was paid.

On the death of Khem Sawant, in 1803, two cousins of the late Chief claimed the State, and Sawant Wari was convulsed with a civil war. This was followed by an invasion from Kolhapur led by the Chief of that State; and Sawant Wari passed through a period of sore anarchy and confusion. The widow Lakshmi Bai, in her capacity of Regent, sought the aid of Appa Desai Nipanikar, who fell upon Kolhapur in the absence of its Raja, and obliged him to leave Sawant Wari and expel the invader from his own borders. Appa Desai now attempted to establish his own power in Sawant Wari, and, with the concurrence of Lakshmi Bai and Phond Sawant, the heir presumptive, strangled in his bed Bhaui Sahib (Ramchandra Sawant), son of Sriram Sawant, and lawful heir to the throne. But Appa Desai derived no benefit from the infamous crime; for Phond Sawant drove him out of the State, and obtained the supreme power.

In 1812, this Chief concluded a treaty with the British Government, by which he ceded Vingorla and engaged to suppress piracy. He died in the same year, and was succeeded by his son, Khem Sawant, a child of eight years. The Regency was assumed by Durga Bai, widow of Khem Sawant, who died in 1803. This remarkable woman displayed her activity in a long series of hostile acts that rendered necessary the occupation of Sawant Wari, in 1819, by a British force. A treaty was then dictated, under the terms of which Sawant Wari ceded territory, acknowledged British supremacy, and was guaranteed protection. In 1822, Khem Sawant assumed the reins of Government: but his mismanagement and misconduct became so intolerable, that Government was compelled to assume charge of the State in 1838. In 1839 and 1844, insurrections broke out that were speedily suppressed. Khem Sawant died in 1867, and was succeeded by Phond Sawant, Anna Sahib, who, in 1869, left the State to the present Chief.

The general aspect of this State is strikingly picturesque. Richly-wooded hills are scattered over it, while in the valleys groves of the graceful cocoanut tree and supari palm diversify the scene. The inhabitants generally are poor and engaged in agriculture. The staple produce is rice.

THE SATARA JAGHIRDARS.—By the 7th Article of the Satara Treaty of 1819, the possessions of the Jaghirdars within the Raja's territory were guaranteed by the British Government, who engaged to secure that the Jaghirdars should perform the service they owed to the Raja according to established custom. The Jaghirdars thus guaranteed were those noted on the margin (all first-class Sirdars of the Deckan) and Sheikh of the grants made by the Rajas of Satara. In 1839, on the accession of Shahji, the Jaghirdars were placed under the direct management and control of the British Government, their contingents and pecuniary payments being reserved to the Raja on the scale fixed in 1819. They have not the power of life and death. All serious criminal cases, involving capital punishment or transportation for life, are tried in a Court presided over by a British officer, in association with the Jaghirdar within whose territory the offence was committed, and the confirmation of the Imperial Government is required before the sentence can be carried into effect.

S. Mahratta Jaghirdars. CHIEFS OF THE SOUTHERN MAHRATTA COUNTRY.—The district known as the Southern Mahratta Country nearly corresponds to the Mahratta geographical division of the “Karnatik,” or country situated between the rivers Krishna and Tungabhadra, a tract frequently referred to during the Mahratta campaigns of the early part of this century as “the Doab.” It comprises the whole or portions of the British Collectorates of Belgaum, Dharwar and Kaladgi, and the Native States of Savanur, Madhól, Sangli, Miraj, Kurandwad, Jamkhandi and Ramdurg. Kolhapur may also be placed within its limits, which are indeed nearly identical with those of the State as constituted by the treaty of 1731, between the two branches of Sevaji’s family. This tract of country came under the British in 1818-19, together with the rest of the Peishwa’s dominions. The Chiefs who come under the category of Southern Mahratta Jaghirdars are those noted on the margin. They are all first-class Sirdars of the Deckan. They may be referred to three great families—the Patwardhan, the Bhawa, and the Gorepuray. Of these the Patwardhan Chief of Sangli alone enjoys first-class jurisdiction, having power to try for capital offences any persons except British subjects. The others have second-class jurisdiction, having power to try for capital offences their own subjects only.

Savanur. SAVANUR.—Abdul Rauf Khan, the founder of this Pathan family, obtained, in 1680, from the Emperor Aurangzeb, the grant of Bankapur, Torgul and Azimnagar, with a command of 7,000 horse. Subsequently the family was deprived of this territory ; but, seeking the Peishwa's protection, it obtained an annual pension of Rs. 48,000. Through the intervention of General Wellesley, this was eventually commuted to a grant of territory yielding an equal revenue.

When the British Government succeeded to the sovereignty of the Southern Mahratta Country, it assumed complete jurisdiction over Savanur ; but the Nawab was placed in the first grade of the privileged classes, and declared to be exempt from the jurisdiction of the District Magistrate.

During the minority of the present Chief, Nawab Abdul Dalil Khan, the State is managed by the Collector of Dharwar.

JANJIRA.—Tradition ascribes the origin of this State to a Janjira. party of Abyssinians, in the service of the Nizam Shahi Kings of Ahmednagar, who, disguised as traders, obtained permission (about the year 1489) from the Chief of the island to land three hundred boxes, each of which held a soldier. These soldiers suddenly rising from their boxes, seized Danda Rajapur.

The Abyssinians of Janjira waged incessant war with the Mahrattas ; and always succeeded in holding their own. Indeed, until 1862, this little principality maintained a proud independence, paying no tribute, and permitting no British Agent to reside in the island. But after a long course of misconduct, the British were obliged to interfere in that year ; and again in 1867, when the Chief was deprived of his criminal jurisdiction. In 1870, the Nawab visited Bombay to pay his respects to H. R. H. the Duke of Edinburgh ; and injudiciously prolonging his stay, his nobles rose and formally deposed him, giving the State to his son. The Government of India reinstated him, however, on condition of his engaging to be guided by the advice of its Agents and of his reforming his administration.

The Political Agent is the Collector of Colaba. An Assistant resides permanently at Marad, three miles from the fort.

Chapter VIII.—HAIDARABAD.

Haidarabad. HAIDARABAD.—The Nizam-ul-Mulk of Haidarabad is the greatest feudatory of the Empire. The area of his dominions, if we include the assigned districts of the Berars, exceeds by more than 10,000 square miles that of Great Britain, and the population under his immediate government is greater than that of Ireland. To preserve order and to maintain the dignity of this great State a force of about 37,000 Foot and 8,000 Horse is entertained.

The founder of the present dynasty was Chin Kilich Khan, himself a distinguished Commander, and his father a favourite officer of Aurangzeb. He belonged to a respectable Turk family. Able, cunning and unscrupulous, with the best interest at Court, he was bound to rise in life, and when he became Viceroy of the Deckan he was still a young man. In 1724, the Emperor becoming jealous of his increasing power, incited Mobariz Khan, the local Governor of Haidarabad, to conspire against his life and supersede him. But Mobariz Khan failed in the attempt and was slain, and the Viceroy—generally known by the title of Asaph Jah, or Nizam-ul-Mulk—with grim humour, wrote to congratulate the Emperor on the successful suppression of the revolt, and forwarded Mobariz Khan's head. Henceforth Asaph Jah conducted himself as an independent prince; and when he died, in 1748, his territory extended from the Nerbadda to Trichinapali, and from Masulipatam to Bijapur. He was succeeded by his second son, Nazir Jang. At this time the French, aspiring to empire in Asia, were eager to make themselves felt in every direction, and with a view to this, they warmly espoused the cause of Muzaffar Jang, who had been nominated heir by his grandfather, Asaph Jah. At first the tide of fortune set strongly against Muzaffar Jang, and he had actually surrendered his person, when his uncle being assassinated he succeeded to the great inheritance he had been brought up to look upon as his own. But he did not long enjoy his honors. On his way to take possession of Haidarabad he was treacherously murdered, in 1751.

Salabat Jang, third son of Asaph Jah, at once succeeded; and his reign lasted for ten years, our earliest treaty with Haidarabad was concluded in 1759 with this prince.

In 1761, Salabat Jang was deposed by his brother, Nizam Ali, and died two years afterwards in prison.

- During the rule of Nizam Ali the bonds of alliance between the British Government and Haidarabad were gradually strengthened. The two Powers co-operated in the military operations that led to the fall of Seringapatam, and the overthrow of Tippu Sultan. Nizam Ali died in 1803.

His son, Sikandar Jah, succeeded. This Chief withdrew himself almost entirely from public affairs, and making no provision whatever for their conduct, left his State a prey to anarchy. It was accordingly found necessary to place British officers in administrative charge of the various districts.

On the death of Sikandar Jah, in 1829, his son, Nazir-ud-Daula, who succeeded, requested that the direct interference of British officers in the administration of the country might be discontinued; and his request was complied with.

Nazir-ud-Daula died in 1857, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Afzal-ud-Daula, father of the present Nizam. This prince stood firm to his allegiance through the Mutiny, and in 1861 received the Grand Cross of the Star of India. He died in 1869.

The city of Haidarabad was founded in 1569 by Mahomed Kuli, one of the Qutb Shahi kings. It stands on the right bank of the river Musi, about eight miles from the old capital and fortress of Golconda.

- Haidarabad is famous for its cotton. The produce of the Edlabad district, which chiefly finds its way to the market of Hinganghat, is especially esteemed. The mango and custard-apple grow wild over large tracts of the State. The melons and pineapples of Haidarabad are as celebrated as the oranges of Nagpur; and the large purple grape of Daulatabad is exported to many distant markets.

The Nizam's State coins its own money; makes its own laws; constitutes its own Courts of Justice; and raises its own taxes. It is, however, prohibited by treaty from holding communication with any other States, or entering into any negotiations with them without the consent of the Paramount Power. Moreover, when a Nizam dies, the British Resident must be consulted as to the appointment of a successor, and no such appointment is valid without the approval of the Government of India.

Two contingents are maintained by the British Government for the defence of Haidarabad. One is known as the Haidarabad Subsidiary Force, and the other as the Haidarabad Contingent. For the maintenance of the former, the Ceded Districts were made over to us in full sovereignty under the treaty of 1800; and for the support of the latter, the province of Berar was assigned to us in trust, under the treaties of 1853 and 1860.

The present Nizam-ul-Mulk is a delicate boy of eleven years. He has no full brothers or sisters. He is intelligent and well-disposed. An English officer superintends his education; but, much of his time is still spent with his mother, Wadid-u-Nisa, Begam, and with his grandmother, Dilawar-u-Nisa, Begam. While he is thus well cared for, his State is under the wise management of the great Minister, Sir Salar Jang.

Chapter IX.—MAISUR.

Maisur.

MAISUR.—Little is known of the early history of this principality. According* to the Hindu legend a small territory to the west of the Karnatik, consisting of two forts and a few villages, was rendered a distinct and independent State by two young men of the Yadu tribe, who, coming as strangers to a marriage festival at Hadana, near Maisur, slew, with the connivance of the bride and her relatives, the destined bridegroom, a Chief of Karugali. The elder married the bride, and became the recognised Chief of the united territories. This was about 1399. But the first Chief we really know any thing about is Cham Raj, the six-fingered, and he was more of a Baron than a King. He lived in the early part of the sixteenth century. His successor, Betad Cham Raj, in 1524, divided his possessions among his three sons, to the youngest of whom,—Cham Raj, the Bald,—was assigned the fort of Puragarh, with some of the adjacent villages. In the same year this fort was improved and strengthened, and its name was changed to Mahesh Asur, the Buffalo-headed Monster,—whence Maisur. In 1609, the ninth Chief, Raj Wadiar, seized Seringapatam, which was then held by a Lieutenant of the Vizianagar* kings, and by a series of aggressions greatly extended the limits of his patrimony. His successors, Cham Raj, Kantirai, Dodda Deoraj and Chikka Deoraj, all added to the State by conquest, until it comprised the whole of the present Ashtagram Division, and more than half that of Nandidrug, besides part of the Koimbatour and Salem districts of Madras. The total area probably amounted to 15,000 square miles, with a revenue of fifty lakhs. Chikka Deoraj died in 1704. His successor, Kantirai II., who reigned for ten years, was born deaf and dumb. The next Chief was almost imbecile, and the whole power of the State now passed into the hands of ambitious ministers and adventurers.

While Maisur was thus a prey to greedy officials, Haidar Ali, an officer of humble origin in the State army rose to power. His intrigues, and treaties and battles cannot be spoken of in this place. Suffice it to say that during his life-time he left the titular sovereignty to the old dynasty, although treating its representatives with the utmost harshness and severity. His son, Tippu Sultan, however, was not so moderate. He assumed both the nominal and real supremacy, and when Seringapatam was taken in 1799, Sir Arthur Wellesley found the little Raja—about six years old—with his mother and all his relations living in a wretched hovel, and despoiled of the simplest personal ornaments without which the humblest Hindu is rarely seen. To this child Lord Wellesley found it convenient to restore the family dominions. He was called Krishna Raj Wadiar. Brought up in extreme indigence as a child, and uneducated as a boy, he grew up self-willed and wronged-headed. He was despotic, capricious, extravagant and entirely ignorant of the first principles of administration: so after he had been formally placed in power by the British Government, and started well with respectable officials, a full treasury and an administrative system, it was soon found necessary, in order to save Maisur from the miseries of anarchy, to resume the management of the country. The machinery of Government had all fallen to pieces in an incredibly short time. Every official had become an authorised plunderer, trade and agriculture were becoming impossible, and the entire framework of society was breaking up. Lord W. Bentinck therefore wrote to the Raja declaring that he "felt it indispensable, as well with reference to the stipulations of the subsidiary Treaty of 1799, as from a regard to the obligations of a protective character which the British Government held towards the State of Maisur, to interfere for its preservation, and to secure the various interests at stake from further ruin." It seemed to him that in order to do this effectually it would be necessary to transfer the entire administration of the country into the hands of British Officers, and a Commission was accordingly appointed to effect this.

Maharaja Krishna Raj Wadiar died at Maisur in 1868. His adopted son, the present Chief, Chamrajendra Wadiar, was installed as his successor in the same year.

For nearly half a century Maisur has now enjoyed the fostering care of the Paramount Power, and when the young Maharaja comes of age in 1880, he will enter upon a rich and splendid inheritance. To prepare him for the high responsibilities that it will carry with it, the Government of India has made every provision for his education; and as he will receive a great and prosperous country to rule over, that country, it is hoped, will receive a wise and just prince to honor and obey.

Colonel Malleon, who was for some years his Tutor and Guardian, gives us the following account of the plan pursued in educating the Maharaja:—"A school was formed in one of the palaces in the healthiest part of Maisur. To it were invited the sons of the nobles and officers of State, and there, in September 1869, did the Raja, then six years and a half old, begin his education. From that time up to the present his progress has been steady and satisfactory. He is being taught all, with the exception of Latin and Greek, that would be taught in an English school. He has learned to ride, even to hunt

“with the hounds, to play cricket, and to drive. He has manifested a cheerful, steady and painstaking disposition. He is punctual and methodical in his habits, and evinces an amiability of character which promises well for the future.”

Maisur has an area equal to that of Scotland, with a population of upwards of five millions. It is a great undulating plateau, diversified with isolated hills rising abruptly from the plain.

Chapter X.—MADRAS.

TRAVANCÔR.—Tradition asserts that the rich, damp land lying between the mountains and the Indian Ocean in the far south was reclaimed from the sea by a powerful saint named Sri Paras Rama, and peopled by a colony of Brahmans. Of the saint we can say nothing; but a very ancient Brahman community, known as Namburi, still exists as a landed aristocracy, holding immemorial inheritances exempt from any tax, due or rent whatsoever. Tradition goes on to say that Kshatriya Chiefs were invited by them to come and rule over this country; which they did, being elected for periods of twelve years. These Chiefs eventually established their power on a firm and independent basis. The last of them is said to have been named Cheruman Perumal. He at first ruled Kerala as Viceroy of the Chola kings, and afterwards established an independent sovereignty. We read that he held a great strip of the rich Coast lands, finally parcelling them out among his children, the eldest of whom received for his share the southern portion with a small village now known as Tiruvankodu. This event is said to have taken place about 1,200 years ago; and it is possible that the present dynasty has existed for this period.

The Malayalim era (known as the Quilon era) dates from 825 A.D., and the names of the Princes who ruled successively since that year are preserved, though really authentic* history only carries us back for about 200 years.

* Commercial intercourse between Europe and Travancôr is said to have been carried on in the time of the Romans: and at a very early period a colony of Jews is supposed to have settled on the coast. It is also believed that about the year 350 A.D., one Kona Thoma established a colony of Syrian Christians.

In 1648, the English settled at Anjengo, obtaining permission to build a factory. The Commercial Resident located there used to supply the Travancôr Raja with military clothing, arms and ammunition, in exchange for pepper and other valuable produce of the country. At this time the Travancôr army was disciplined on the European model and commanded by Portuguese, Dutch, and Italian adventurers. During our wars with Haidar Ali and Tippu Sultan, Travancôr was the steadfast ally of the British ; and it was an attack upon Travancôr that brought upon Tippu Sultan the military operations which terminated in his death on the ramparts of Seringapatam. In 1795 and 1805, the Honorable East India Company concluded treaty engagements with the State, and except for a brief period in 1809, the most friendly relations have ever since continued to subsist.

According to a fundamental law of the State, the succession to the throne descends through the female line. If the Chief, for example, has two sons and a daughter, he will be succeeded by the male offspring of his daughter. In the event of a failure in the direct female line, the selection and adoption of two or more female relatives of the family, or Tumbarans, is necessary to the continuance of the royal race. An adoption of this character occurred in 1788, when two sisters were chosen. Both sisters gave birth to daughters. The younger and her child both died. The daughter of the elder was the mother of the late Maharaja ; while the present Chief is a son of his predecessor's sister. In 1857, the female line again became extinct, when the Maharaja, with the concurrence of the British Government, adopted two of his female relatives to continue the race.

The present Maharaja, who is a highly educated, accomplished and travelled Prince, is one of the ablest and best rulers in India. He speaks English fluently and correctly, and carries on an extensive correspondence in that language. In addition to his own tongue,—Malayalim,—he can speak Hindi, Mahratti, Tamil, and Telugu. His Highness has, moreover, a refined and cultivated taste in literature and music.

Travancôr is one of the most beautiful portions of southern India. The mountains which separate it, on the east, from the British provinces of the Coromandel Coast, and which at some points rise to an elevation of 8,000 feet above the level of the sea, are clothed with magnificent primeval forest, while the belt of flat country to an average distance of about ten miles from the sea inland is covered with an almost unbroken and dense mass of cocoanut and areca palms. The forests contain teak, anjelly, ebony, blackwood, borassus and simal. Pepper, cardamoms, nutmegs and cloves form characteristic items in the Trade Returns.

COCHIN.—According to tradition the Rajas of Cochin claim to hold territory in right of descent from Cheruman Perumal, who ruled over the whole of Kerala, including Travancôr and Malabar, as Viceroy of the Chola kings, about the beginning of the ninth century, and who afterwards established himself as an independent sovereign.

In 1776, Cochin was conquered by, and became tributary to, Haider Ali; but Tippu ceded all claims upon it to the British in 1792. The Honorable East India Company then reconferred the full sovereign powers of the State upon the Raja, subject to a tribute of Rs. 1,00,000, to be paid in consideration of war expenses incurred by the British in recovering from Tippu Sultan the forts and districts he had seized. By a Subsidiary Treaty entered into, in 1809, after the suppression of the insurrection in which Cochin and Travancôr conjointly took part, the Raja agreed to pay the Honorable East India Company, in addition to the former tribute, an annual sum of 1,76,037 Arcot Rupees, calculated to cover the cost of maintaining a contingent battalion of Native Infantry.

Subsequently these payments were reduced to one sum of two lakhs a year, the present pecuniary obligation of Cochin to the British Government.

Travancôr and Cochin form one political charge, under a British Resident. The present Raja, or Muta Tumbaran, Rama Virma, is a fair Sanscrit scholar. He is a Knight Commander of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.

PUDUKOTTAL.—The Chiefs of this State are Sudras of the Pudukottai Kallan tribe,—the predatory “Colleries” of Orme and early English writers.

Our first relations with the State were formed at the siege of Trichinapalli in 1753, when the British army greatly depended on the fidelity of "the Tondiman,"—as he was called,—and on his exertions to provide supplies. The Chief of Pudukottai subsequently rendered us service in the wars with Haidar Ali, and in the Poligar* war. In recognition of these services, the fort and district of Kilanelli, yielding a revenue of about Rs. 30,000 a year, were conferred upon him, subject† to the yearly tribute of an elephant.

The administration is conducted under the supervision of a Political Agent stationed at Trichinapalli.

His Excellency Raja Rama Chandra Tondima Bahadur has a good knowledge of English, and a slight acquaintance with French; he speaks,—besides Tamil, his own vernacular,—Telugu, Hindi and Mahratti.

Banganapalli.

BANGANAPALLI.—This Jaghir seems to have been originally granted to Mahomed Beg Khan, eldest son of the Grand Vizier of the Emperor Aurangzeb. It was afterwards confirmed by successive grants from Maisur and Haidarabad; and by the Treaty of 1800 was conferred on Muzaffar Mulk and his heirs for ever. In 1825, in consequence of the gross mismanagement that prevailed, the Honorable Company found it necessary to assume charge of the State for a time: but, in 1848, it was restored to Hussein Ali Khan, the eldest surviving heir. Under the terms of a sanad granted to the late Nawab, Banganapalli is declared to be an independent State, free of peshkash and pecuniary demand; but the Chief is at all times bound to maintain faith and allegiance to the Paramount Power. The civil jurisdiction of the Chief is unrestricted; but, in the administration of criminal justice, he is debarred from mutilating prisoners, and bound to refer all capital sentences to the Government of Madras for confirmation.

Banganapalli is famed for its mangoes and oranges.

Sandur.

SANDUR.—The founder of the ruling family of Sandur was Malloji Rao Ghorpuri, an officer in the army of the King of Bijapur. His son, Biroji, entered the service of the Raja of Sattara, and bore the name of Hindu Rao. Sandur had belonged previously to a Beder Poligar, but Biroji's son, Siddoji, among other exploits, took Sandur from the Beders, and his conquest was confirmed to him and his heirs by his sovereign, Sambhaji, the successor of the great Sevaji. On the death of Siddoji, in 1715, his son, Gopal Rao, succeeded. The fate of this Chief is involved in obscurity. All we know is, that Sandur was taken by Haidar Ali, some time after his capture of Gutti, in 1799 ; and that he commenced and Tippu completed the fort, and that Gopal Rao's son, Siva Rao, was killed in battle, in 1785, in a fruitless attempt to recover his patrimony. Siva Rao's brother, Vencata Rao, on behalf of the former's son, Siddoji, expelled Tippu's garrison in 1790, but did not attempt to occupy the State. After the fall of Seringapatam, the Peishwa, assuming possession of Sandur, conferred it upon a distinguished Mahratta soldier, Jeswant Rao Ghorpure, who, however, never entered upon the grant ; and, on Tippu's death, Siva Rao, who had been adopted by Siddoji's widow, was put in possession. The British Government granted him a sanad confirming him and his heirs in possession for ever, free of all pecuniary demands.

Sandur is completely surrounded by a cordon of hills, which isolates it from the neighbouring portions of the Bellary district. In the year 1846, the Madras Government obtained permission from the Chief to establish a Convalescent Depôt for the European troops at Bellary on the plateau of Ramandrug. The sanitarium stands at a height of 3,150 feet above sea level.

Raja Siva Shan Mukha Rao, Hindu Rao Ghorpuri, Mamlekat Madar, Senapatti, is a Mahratta. Besides his own vernacular, he knows both Telugu and Canarese.

APPENDIX B.

Members of the ex-Imperial Family of Delhi, resident at Benares.

The six Delhi princes, now resident at Benares, are the lineal descendants of Mirza Jehandar Shah, heir-apparent to Shah Alam, the last of the Delhi Emperors. Jehandar Shah, having incurred the displeasure of his father, and being in danger of his life, fled from Delhi, and took refuge at the Court of Lucknow, where a stipend of Rs. 25,000 a month was assigned by the Oude Government for his support. Afterwards, in 1788, he came to Benares to reside under the protection of the British Government. The extensive range of buildings on the river side, called the Shewalla, which was formerly a place of worship, belonging to Raja Cheit Singh, and was sequestered by Government on that Chief's insurrection, was placed by Mr. Duncan, the British Resident, at the disposal of Mirza Jehandar Shah. His family have lived there ever since. The Prince died in May, 1788, and a pension of Rs. 17,000 a month was sanctioned by Government for the support of his family; and this provision was subsequently guaranteed by the 6th Article of the Treaty concluded with the late Nawab Vizier, Saadat Ali Khan, in 1798.

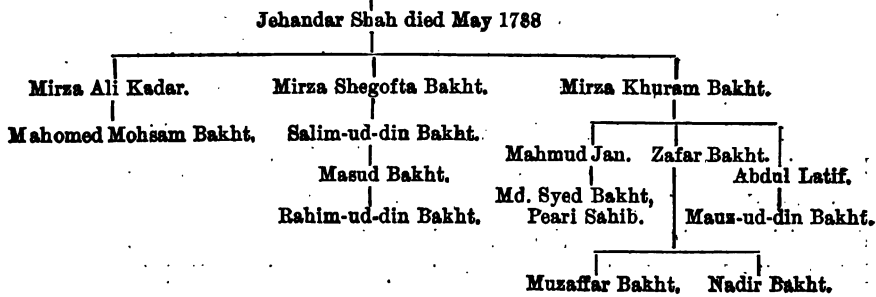

These six Delhi Princes are recipients of monthly pensions from Government, as set forth opposite their names in the margin. They are the last representatives of the family of the Great Moghals. Within the four walls of their simple residence is all that remains to them of the magnificent empire which Baber founded, and which his successors extended from the farthest snows of the Hindu Kush to the palm groves and rice fields of the southern peninsula. The grants of land their fathers conferred upon faithful servants and adherents have been transmitted through many generations to persons now wielding sovereign powers and enjoying princely revenues : and commissions of authority delegated by them to military commanders have expanded into royal prerogatives. The shoots are springing up into great trees, while the parent trunk is fallen and decayed. The last members of this worn-out race, sauntering listlessly on the terrace that overlooks the solemn waters of the Ganges, must feel that they belong to a bygone world ; and the echo of the noisy present must fall harshly on their ears as their servants gossip to them of the new empire, or tell them of strange pageants in the ancient capital of their line.

A genealogical tree of these Princes is appended :—

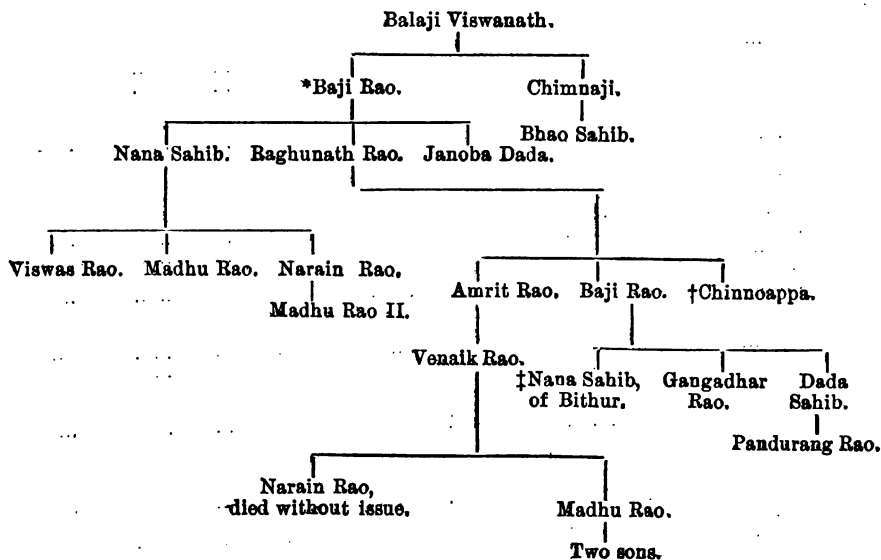

The Emperor Shah Alam, the last of the "Great Moghals," died 1806.

APPENDIX C.

The Descendants of the Peishwa.

A young Brahman, who was educated at the Government College of Bareilly, and who now lives in that city, is the lineal representative of the Peishwas, who at the beginning of this century ruled over a wide and magnificent empire, and exacted homage and allegiance from the great Houses of Sindia, Holkar, Gaekwar and Puar. This young man receives from the British Government a pension of about Rs. 2,000 a month. His name is Madhu Rao. The appended table shows his origin.

* Baji Rao had, by a Mussalman concubine, a son, who, following the religion of his mother, was named Shamsheer Bahadur. This was the father of Ali Bahadur who conquered the greater part of Bundelkhand. On the establishment of British authority throughout Bundelkhand, Ali Bahadur's son, Shamsheer Bahadur, was glad to accept a provision of four lakhs a year, with permission to reside at Banda. He was commonly spoken of afterwards as "the Nawab of Banda." His brother, Zulfiqar Ali, succeeded him. The next Nawab, Ali Bahadur, joined the mutineers in 1857, and forfeited his pension. He was, for the remainder of his life, kept under surveillance at Indôr. He died in 1873. His three sons are now at Indore, receiving their education at the Residency (Rajkumar) College.

† Executed for rebellion in 1857.
